State Board of Arbitration Takes Hand in Effort to Settle Strike—Leaders of Men Urge Peace and Order, but Public Is Excited Over Strike Breakers.

Special to the Boston American.

NEW BEDFORD, July 26.—Sixty "Farley" strikebreakers from New York are at the Weld street car barn, ready to run out cars this noon. They are armed, and will be protected by armed policemen. The strikebreakers boasted that they were "looking for trouble."

Outbreaks are feared, as the temper of the public, despite the appeals of the strikers themselves for peace and order, is becoming more ugly.

Efforts toward arbitration are going on in the City Hall. Mayor Thompson and a committee of the strikers are conferring in one office. In the next room President Henry Crapo of the Union Street Railway Company is conferring with the three members of the State Board of Conciliation and Arbitration. A joint conference of the two separate conferences is to be held if possible.

DISCUSS ARBITRATION.

The first conference began at 9:30 o'clock when Mayor Thompson, Organizer Fitzgerald and the union committee met the Board of Arbitration in the Mayor's office. They talked till 10:30 o'clock. Then President Crapo came and was closeted with the Board of Arbitration in the Mayor's outer office. The advent of President Crapo is considered a concession on his part, as he said yesterday he would "not see the Board of Arbitration and had nothing to arbitrate."

The leader of the strikebreakers says that he will have 100 men here to-day or to-morrow. A gang of forty-nine is already en route from Fall River, arriving there this morning on the new line steamer Kennebec.

TWENTY-FIVE CARS RUNNING.

Twenty-five cars are running to-day, most of them on the Purchase-street line. The company claims that it is making ten-minute time. The Purchase-street cars carry the armed policemen detailed by Chief Donaghy upon the demand of the company.

There are now eighty strikebreakers here. Twenty came yesterday from surrounding cities.

But the sixty who landed to-day from New York are a far different looking lot of men. Every one, as sized up by the indignant townspeople, is a "fighter" from the start. They arrived at 8:30 o'clock on the New Bedford line steamer Maine.

As soon as the steamer docked they swarmed out on to the wharf and up Union street. To a knot of newspapermen who questioned them they said frankly that they were here as strike breakers. One of them said defiantly:

"LOOKING FOR TROUBLE."

"This is a jay town. We are going to break things up here if we have to. We are looking for trouble and we don't care how soon it comes."

The dock is at the foot of Union street.

ON BOARD STEAMSHIP AMERIKA, uly 26.—After a rough, foggy trip the merika arrived off the Newfoundland anks to-day carrying John D. Rockefeller o his way to New York.

The richest man in the world was out n deck early in the day, walking up and own as if he were an athlete out to do is ten miles before the morning was over.

Part of the morning was spent in playing huffleboard, at which Mr. Rockefeller has ecome more proficient than when he sailed or Europe, and tried the game on his way o Liverpool.

"I believe it is the duty of a wealthy man to spend his money," said Mr. Rockefeller while he was walking about, "providing the spending is done judiciously, so hat it will benefit mankind. I don't believe that I have any right to hoard my oney."

Mr. Rockefeller talked later in the morning about the conflicts between labor and apital, strikes and their effect on business.

"I believe that labor and capital everywhere will soon reach an understanding," aid the oil magnate, "and reach it on a ommonsense basis. Then strikes will ease, and mankind will be benefited."

"Reggie" Vanderbilt is one of Mr. Rockefeller's fellow passengers, but the two illionaires have not met. Young Mr. anderbilt won the day's pool on the disance travelled by the ship yesterday.

FOSS DECLARES BITTER WAR ON LODGE CROWD

Will Fight Machine He Says if He Has to Wage Battle Single-Handed.

Declaring that he will forego what looks like a sure election to Congress from the Eleventh District, Eugene N. Foss, in a letter to Channing Smith of Leicester, the arch-enemy of Senator Lodge on the Republican State Committee, announces that he intends to fight the Lodge machine if he has to go it alone.

Foss charges that the machine has disposed of all offices for twelve years in advance.

The letter, which is the hottest contribution to the Republican campaign literature to date, says, in part:

Mr. Dear Mr. Smith: I want to drop you a line and express my great pleasure at having met such uncompromising Republicans as you and your venerable father.

Your suggestion of General Draper for chairman of the committee on resolutions of the Republican State Convention was one to be expected from a man of your straightforward integrity, and I am sure that all good citizens, whether stand-patters or reciprocitarians, deplore the duplicity of our political platforms.

It has been given out from Washington that a stand-pat campaign is to be made this fall all over the country; that the last vestige of reciprocity sentiment is to be stamped out. To this end Secretary Shaw, Speaker Cannon and Representative McCleary are to pounce down on Massachusetts and belittle our Republican Representatives like George P. Lawrence, Samuel W. McCall, William C. Lovering and John W. Weeks, who had the courage to stand up on the floor of Congress and be counted for reciprocity and tariff revision.

I am going to stand up and fight the whole crowd, if I have to do it alone. I am going to forego what good politicians tell me looks like election in the Eleventh Congressional District, in order that I may go before the people of the whole State and stand up for the men who have dared to stand up for us in Washington. I believe the people will be with me, too. This Lodge machine, of which, I regret to say, my friend Eben S. Draper is part, must be overthrown. It has stood in the way of all kinds of progress in the State. The machine has made up the slate for all offices for twelve years in advance. As you have said publicly, no man has any chance of political preferment in Massachusetts who will not wear the collar of the political boss of the State. Now, I am in for breaking up this sort of thing.

'TOM' JOHNSON SMILES AT 'CONTEMPT'

Judge Reserves Till To-morrow Decision on Charge Against Cleveland Mayor.

CLEVELAND, O., July 26.—With his usual smile Mayor Tom L. Johnson appeared in Judge Ford's Court at 9:30 o'clock to-day to answer the charge of contempt. With him were Director of Public Service Springborn and an array of attorneys. The courtroom was crowded, politicians being present in great numbers. The citation of the Mayor had aroused their interest intensely.

Officials of the Cleveland Electric Railway Company and a big array of attorneys were on hand. They took the affair in a much more serious manner than the Mayor and his party.

The case was opened by the railroad's attorneys offering proof that the Mayor and Springborn had been served with notice to discontinue tearing up the tracks on Fulton road yesterday, but the injunction was ignored.

After hearing the arguments Judge Ford reserved decision till to-morrow.

Johnson Explains His Act.

Before entering court Mayor Johnson said this in explanation:

"June 11 the City Council, by resolution, ordered the railway company to move its single track on Fulton road and directed the Board of Public Service to move the track unless the company complied within thirty days. The order has been utterly ignored by the company. The railway has been violating the law all the time and has shown no inclination to obey the city's order, which was a perfectly reasonable and usual one.

"There have been more than forty days during which the railway company has violated the laws of the city, and at any time during these weeks they might have interposed any legal objections to the city's doing the work itself.

"Apparently the corporation thinks the city is bound to do its bidding in all things, but the half million people in this city have no rights at all in their own streets.

City's Only Recourse.

"When the street railways are in contempt of the laws of the city the only thing the city can do is to enforce its ordinances in the way we have done. It is the business of the executive department of the city to carry out the council's orders and enforce the laws even when they are violated by a corporation as big as the street railway company."

After hearing arguments Judge Ford reserved decision on the contempt charge till to-morrow.

The new three-cent fare line this morning had gangs of workmen laying tracks on the disputed territoritory on Fulton road. The old company offered no resistance. A big detail of police were on hand.

FENWAY WORKMEN BEFORE GRAND JURY

DISTRICT ATTORNEY SEEKS GRAFT EVIDENCE AMONG THE EMPLOYES.

To obtain his evidence first hand rather than have it all come from the contractors themselves, District Attorney John B. Moran caused summonses to be served to-day on over a score of Italian laborers who were employed in the Fenway work which is being investigated by the special session of the Grand Jury.

Guided by Inspectors Armstrong and Waltt and accompanied by an interpreter, the laborers were marched into the District Attorney's office. Mr. Moran questioned them himself.

It is understood that the laborers are asked to tell what they know about the materials that were used in mixing the mortar and cement for the work, what kind of supplies were used and how much. One by one they went into the District Attorney's private office and told their stories with the interpreter's aid.

Truckload of Books.

One two-horse truck, loaded with books of the sewer department, was backed up at the entrance to the courthouse and its contents carried into Mr. Moran's office. They are the books that are expected to tell just how the city's money was expended on the contract.

Edgar S. Dorr, executive engineer of the Sewer Department, with another lot of blue prints of the Fenway work, was closeted for some time with Mr. Moran and his assistants, Mr. Dwyer and Mr. Richardson. Later he went before the Grand Jury to resume his testimony at the point where it was discontinued yesterday.

Mr. Dorr in the room but a few minutes and left to get some material at his office that was desired by Assistant District Attorney Richardson. His place on the witness stand was taken by Inspector Daniel Curtin, of the sewer department, who was in the Grand Jury room for a long time.

One by one the witnesses whose presence was desired by Mr. Moran dropped into his office. Simon Donovan arrived and went into one office. Others who put in an appearance were H. H. Carter of the Metropolitan Construction Company and John B. Graham, both Fenway contractors.

All Busy in Office.

Among the witnesses from the city department who arrived were Henry Sanborn, the engineer in charge of the Fenway improvements for the city, C. L. Weeks, the engineer in charge of the dredging plant, and Julian H. Haynes, an assistant in the city auditor's office.

Mr. Moran conducted some third degree in his own office while both assistants, Dennison and Dwyer, were in their private offices. Mr. Richardson conducted the examination before the Grand Jury. It was said that it was the busiest day that the District Attorney's office has seen for some time. The entire session is being devoted to the Fenway inquiry.

Alderman Charles Black of Chelsea was a caller at the District Attorney's office, but remained only a few minutes. His appearance gave rise to the rumor that the Chelsea bribery charges might be taken up. They will not be reached to-day, however.

FEAR FAILURES UNLESS FIRE RATES ARE PUT UP

The attempt which is being made to effect an increase of fifteen per cent. in fire insurance rates in suburban Boston was blocked to-day at a meeting of the Boston Board of Fire Underwriters by the failure of the advocates of the increase to get the proposition before the board. Assistant Secretary F. Elliott Cabot of the Board said after the meeting:

"Boston fire underwriters are in a bad hole financially as the result of the millions of dollars paid out in San Francisco losses, and unless rates are raised there are liable to be a number of failures."

Another special meeting of the board will be called at once, and the motion to increase the rates re-introduced. An increase of 15 per cent. went into effect in Boston last month. An increase is now asked for in Charlestown, South Boston, East Boston, Roxbury, Dorchester, West Roxbury and Brighton.

DERELICT IN LINERS' PATH.

NEW YORK, July 26.—White Star line steamer Cedric from Liverpool reports that the wandering derelict John S. Deering of Bath, Me., was sighted on July 18, about 1000 miles west of Queenstown, and is a serious menace to ocean steamers.

SEEK A CLUE IN LETTER TO GOODELL GIRL

Detectives to Question Man Alleged to Have Written Her on Day She Left.

Special to the Boston American.

BELCHERTOWN, July 26.—In an effort to unravel the latest of all the mysterious clues which have been unearthed in the case of missing Winzola Goodell, that of a letter whose existence is denied by the man who is alleged to have written it, Detective Hodges has gone to Northampton to-day to question Leon Schiltaire and to confer with District Attorney Irwin.

Young Schiltaire, whose father is a Northampton photographer, is named by Walter Goodell, the lost girl's eighteen-year-old brother, as the author of a letter which he, as assistant postmaster at Dwight station, now remembers was received by Winnie the day she disappeared.

Detective Hoges declare that he will question Schiltaire about the letter and its contents if he finds there really was such a missive. The detective has developed nothing as to the ownership or occupants of the mysterious buggy seen in the woods near Upper Pond. To-day the father of Winnie and her cousin, Sidney Smith, assisted by many neighbors are again dragging the pond, and the mystery of the girl's fate seems as far from solution as ever it did.

A subscription is being taken to raise money enough to hire another diver to search the pond. Mrs. L. N. Goodell of Norwich, Ct., aunt of the missing girl, has sent word that she will contribute $25 and that a friend named Ayers in Norwich will give $10.

FARLEY STRIKE BREAKERS COME TO NEW BEDFORD

LOOKING FOR TROUBLE,' SAID TO BE ARMED

Say They Are Ready to "Tear Things Up" and Call City a "Jay Town."

25 CARS ARE RUN TO-DAY

The gang asked the way to the nearest car barn and were directed by someone. They started up Union street, laughing and talking. The Sundial Hotel's saloon caught the eye of some, who went into the bar.

All the way up the street this New York gang was eyed with no friendly glances by the townspeople. But no move was made against them. The sixty made about as hard a looking proposition to handle in a row as New Bedford ever saw. And there are some pretty able, all-around men among the city's own textile workers at that.

Only one or two cars were run out of the barns this morning up to 8 o'clock, and the thousands of mill operatives were again forced to walk or ride in barges to their work. They are indignant beyond measure, and openly declare that the railway company is ignoring them and giving street car service, such as it is, to the residents of the fashionable streets.

There are evidences that the union will establish lines of automobiles in opposition to the street cars should the company succeed in maintaining its service with any regularity. The company, however, announces that it will run only such cars as can be properly protected and at such times as the condition of the streets warrant.

STRIKERS STILL FIRM.

There have been no desertions from the ranks of the union, and at a meeting held in Hacienda Block last evening six men asked to be admitted to its ranks. Four of these men were among those who operated cars on Tuesday after the strike was declared.

Strike benefits will be paid after next Tuesday, and it is said by the union officials that over $100,000 is already in hand for this purpose and that 75,000 men stand ready to contribute weekly as long as the strike lasts.

There is much enthusiasm over the result of the meeting of car men at Fall River. The men there indorsed the action of the local union and offered to aid the cause in any way. The Fall River men will devise means to prevent the cars of the Dartmouth & Westport Company from entering New Bedford, and will leave the cars at the Narrows, the outer limits of the city, refusing to operate them on the tracks of the Union Street Railway Company.

SIGNS OF VICTORY.

Already the strike officials declare that they see victory in sight because the railway company has conceded several of their demands in a formal notice posted at the car barns. One is in the new wage scale proposed, and another in the new rules and regulations prepared, in which a number of objectionable features are eliminated, particularly that by which a man who was a minute late in the morning was kept about the barn all day without opportunity to take a car out, thus losing a day's pay.

President Fitzgerald declared to-day that if President Crapo of the company would sign, as an agreement between the two bodies, the notices which were posted—the new wage scale and the rules and regulations—the strike would end in five minutes.

President Crapo, when asked if he would sign them as an agreement, said, however:

"I won't say anything about that."

The first lot of twenty strikebreakers wear a motorman's cap with a white band, reading "South Eastern Electric Company." They have no badges as yet, and Superintendent Potter of the railway company explains this by saying that all the company's badges are in the hands of the men now on strike. The caps are part of the outfit secured by the company when it purchased the Taunton & Buzzards Bay Company.

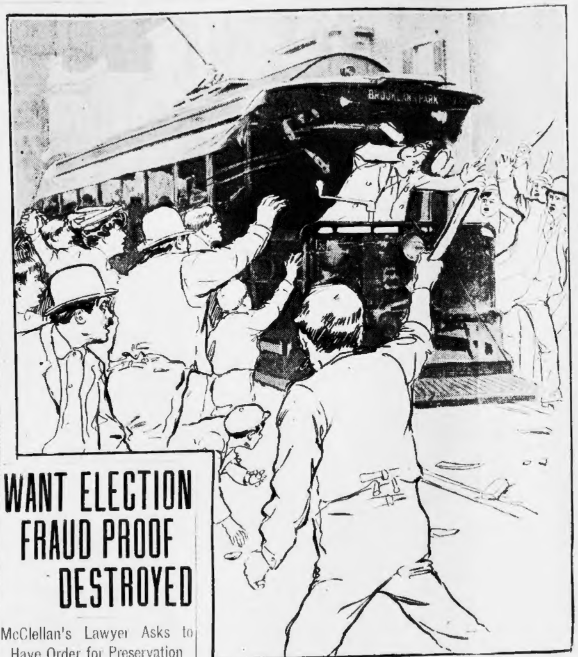
"These strike breakers, as you call them," said Superintendent Potter, "are not inexperienced men or green hands by any means. They are all experienced men and come from other companies where they have been spare men. They come here expecting steady employment, and we shall give it to them."

"WE WALK" BUTTONS VOICE SYMPATHY OF PUBLIC WITH STRIKE

NEW BEDFORD, July 26.—There was no rioting or disorder about the car barns last evening. No cars were run anywhere in the city after 6 o'clock. During the day there were many attempts to obstruct the cars on the part of truck drivers who kept on the tracks for a long distance and going at a slow pace. A new method of delaying the cars was discovered early in the day at the railroad crossings, where, as each car came along, the gates were lowered and kept down for ten minutes or more.

Vice-President Harps of the local car men's union presided at the meeting last evening in the absence of President Cleary, who had gone to Fall River with Organizer Fitzgerald, leader of the strike. The men discussed the situation fully, but took no formal action. Organizer Fitzgerald declared, before he left for Fall River, that if the railway company refuses to pay the men the wages due them, the union will take the matter to the courts. He says that the claim of the company that the men must return their badges and punches is ridiculous, as the men have already paid for them out of their own pockets, leaving a deposit with the company when they were issued, and that these articles now belong to the men and not to the company.

One of the interesting features of the strike on the streets last evening was the presence of thousands of men and women sympathizers, who had adorned their coat lapels with a small yellow button, reading, "WE WALK." These sympathizers gathered in groups on the street corners and sang "Nobody Works But the Scabs," while the tracks were empty of cars.



SCENE IN NEW BEDFORD BEFORE POLICE TOOK CHARGE.

WANT ELECTION FRAUD PROOF DESTROYED

McClellan's Lawyer Asks to Have Order for Preservation of Ballots Vacated.

NEW YORK, July 26.—The decision of Justice MacLean of the Supreme Court in the attempt of "Mayor" McClellan's lawyer to have the order for the preservation of the ballots cast at the last municipal election vacated, or, in ordinary parlance, destroyed, is to-day awaited with intense interest.

The vigorous resistance made to the motion offered yesterday by Clarence J. Shearn, counsel for Mr. Hearst, in which he told why the ballots, which he characterized as documentary evidence of the election frauds, should be kept under seal for future examination, shows that Mr. Hearst intends to continue the fight in an effort to show that McClellan was not elected Mayor.

According to Mr. Shearn, the long-drawn legal battle has cost Mr. Hearst more than $100,000, and, notwithstanding the refusal of Attorney-General Mayer to grant quo warranto proceedings, it is by no means over.

The only excuse given for the desire to destroy the ballots was advanced by Assistant Corporation Counsel Butts, who contended that the ballot boxes were wanted for use in the primaries in September, and for the November election.

To Continue Fight.

Mr. Shearn made it very plain that Mr. Hearst intends to continue the fight. He declared that Mr. Hearst was as determined as ever that the ballots should be properly counted, and explained to the court that an attempt would be made to have the next Legislature pass a recount bill, and that the next Attorney-General would be requested to bring quo warranto proceedings to oust McClellan from office.

An epitome of the entire election controversy, which began immediately after the polls closed and which has been carried on ever since, was given in Mr. Shearn's argument and supplemented in his affidavit, which the Justice took, with the other papers in the case, when he announced that he would render his decision in the early future.

In protesting against the vacation of the order, Mr. Shearn said:

"It appears that the only reason assigned by the corporation counsel for wanting the order vacated is that the ballot boxes are needed for the primaries and the Fall election. I am authorized by my client, Mr. Hearst, to make the offer that he will at his own expense provide the city with the 1,948 new ballot boxes that are required, and that he also will bear the expense of storing the boxes containing the disputed ballots until the matter shall have been finally adjusted."

Justice MacLean listened attentively to Mr. Shearn's offer to supply new boxes and then requested that the offer be reduced to writing, which was forthwith done and handed to the court with the other papers.

"Usurpation of Functions."

"What answer have you to make to that proposition?" asked the justice of the corporation counsel.

"There is only one answer to make," replied Mr. Butts. "It is the duty of the Board of Elections to supply the ballot boxes, and this court has no right to say that it will permit Mr. Hearst or any other citizen to usurp the functions of officials whose duty is prescribed by law."

"Is that so?" commented the Justice. "How about the Board of Elections using the stable of Mr. Libby, on Park avenue?"

"That was done without authority in law," said Mr. Butts, "and again I reiterate that Mr. Hearst cannot be permitted to bargain with the Board of Elections."

"Do you mean to say, Judge Butts," added the Justice, "that if a fire engine, in passing my stable, meets with an accident and one of the horses is disabled, the fire department has not the right to take one of my horses and attach it to the fire engine and continue on its journey to the fire?"

Mr. Butts made no reply, except again to insist that the Court had no right to invest Mr. Hearst with functions that belong to city officials.

STREUB PLEADS NOT GUILTY TO SON'S DEATH

COOLEST MAN IN THE COURTROOM WHEN ARRAIGNED ON MURDER CHARGE TO-DAY.

GREAT BARRINGTON, July 26.—Emil Streub, arrested on the charge of murdering his twelve-year-old son John, was to-day arraigned before Judge Walter B. Sanford in the District Court here. He pleaded not guilty in a firm, distinct voice.

Streub was brought before Judge Sanford at 9 o'clock. He had previously eaten a hearty breakfast and smoked his pipe. He was the coolest man in the room.

His attorney, Herbert C. Joyner, conferred with the court, and the hearing was then adjourned until Friday, August 3.

Mrs. Streub was in the court room. She was the object of nearly as much attention as her husband. She seemed to have recovered her composure and to have rallied from the great nervous strain of the past few days. She is confident of her husband's acquittal. None of the Streub children was in the court room. Streub was taken to the Berkshire County Jail at Pittsfield.

The police refuse to discuss the case. The general impression, however, is that it was not a premeditated crime, but that the elder Streub was trying to detain the boy and take him home, and failing to do so, became enraged and struck him either with a spike, stone or butt of a revolver.

GIRL ELOPER BREAKS PRISON

NEW YORK, July 26.—The old adages, love will find a way and laughs at locksmiths, proved true in the romance of Luda Ankrin, the Kentucky beauty, who for a week had been held a close prisoner in the old Oaks Mansion by her aunt, Mme. Julia Mays, to prevent her elopement with Curtis Day.

Miss Luda risked her pretty neck by climbing down a drain pipe from the second story, climbed fences and leaped into a cab, where her suitor was waiting.

When Mme. Mays returned she found the prisoner flown.

She was called to the telephone and a voice she recognized as Day's gave her this discomforting message:

"Luda and her sister are with me. We are going home. Good by, aunt."

There was an aggravated accent to the word "aunt," but before Mme. Mays could make any inquiries the receiver was hung up. She refused to believe that her niece was married at the time.

The seventeen-year-old girl was materially aided by her sister Hazel, at her aunt's home, and Julia, at their home in Catlettsburg, Ky. Both were in sympathy with her and plotted to outwit their folks, who objected.

MUST GIVE UP GRANDCHILDREN

Weeping and frequently embracing them as she sobs, Mrs. Patrick D. Donahue, of No. 338 Cherry street, West Newton, is to-day preparing to send her grandchildren, Francis and Agnes Pendergast, aged five and nine years respectively, to their father, John E. Pendergast.

Pendergast, a few Sundays ago, his wife having died on May 18, drove out to Newton and took Catherine, another daughter, to his lodgings in Boston, vowing at the same time that he would soon get the others. Since then Pendergast made another attempt to secure Francis and Agnes, but Mr. Donahue and his wife took the children from him and hurried them back to their home, where they have kept a close watch on them since.

"I have been caring for these children for three years," said Mrs. Donahue to-day to a reporter for the BOSTON AMERICAN, as she sobbed. "I will not attempt to keep them longer. I am going to send them to their father to-day. He shall not come for them. I will send them to him.

"I have kept no close guard on them. I have borne the extra work they gave me and the added expense cheerfully until I found that my son-in-law was determined to have them. He shall have his own way now. I can do no more than I have done. I hate to part with the little ones. They are very dear to me and they want to live with me."

WORCESTER POLICE AFTER BOSTON EIGHT

Worcester policemen are organizing an eight-oared crew with a view to challenging the men of the Boston police force to a match race. Thomas F. Gleason is coaching them. The Boston crew includes Joe McGuire and J. J. Whitehead, both ex-amateur champions of America, Joe Hobbs, the old Riverside Boat Club stroke, Fred Greer, George Mitchell, W. H. Crowley and Dennis Casey.

P. J. MAGUIRE IS OUT FOR ALDERMAN

Ex-Alderman P. J. Maguire is out for the Board of Aldermen from the district comprising Wards 18 and 21 after being out of active participation in politics for several years. He announces himself as in the fight to stay and stands on his past record.

Mr. Maguire served in the Common Council from 1879 to 1884 continuously. In 1886 and 1887 he served in the Board of Aldermen.

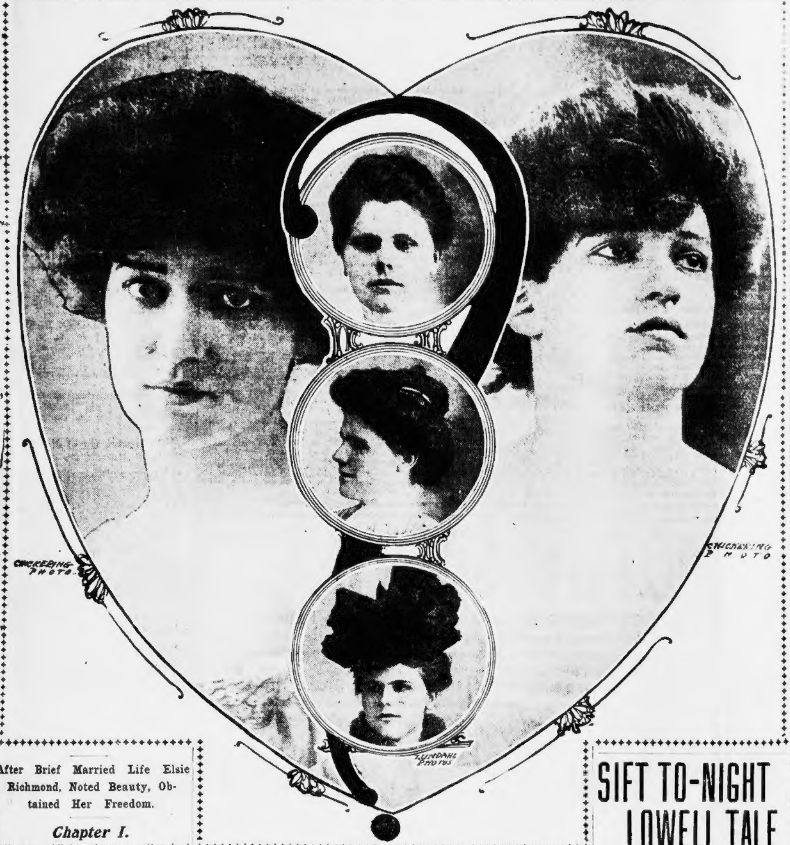
Fortune, Kind to Lovering, Gave Him Two Beautiful Wives, but No. 2, Like No. 1, Now Sues for Divorce



TWO WIVES OF "JOE" LOVERING. WILL THERE BE A THIRD?

The photographs at the sides of the heart are two poses of Elsie Richmond, the noted beauty and actress, who divorced "Happy Joe" after a brief matrimonial experience. Down the centre are photographs of Lovering's second wife, who was Miss Ida Sanborn of Winchester, and is now suing him for divorce, charging intemperance and the opium habit.

After Brief Married Life Elsie Richmond, Noted Beauty, Obtained Her Freedom.

Chapter I.

IF some obliging fortune teller had peered into the future for the exclusive benefit of "Happy Joe" Lovering on his wedding day in the Winter of 1901 and told him that within two years his beautiful bride would denounce and divorce him, and that in the following year he would marry another beauty, who also would denounce and try to divorce him—if these and other misfortunes had been foretold to "Happy Joe" Lovering on his wedding day, he would probably have scoffed at the prophet and told him to go home and guess again.

Chapter II.

Mr. Lovering was born to wealth—not very much of it, but just enough to engender an innate aversion for hard work and a natural taste for the good and expensive things of life.

On coming of age he inherited a small fortune.

Never a niggard in his expenditures, he became princely now, with the result that his dollars soon melted into memories, and the inheritance was soon "all in."

Chapter III.

When he woke up "broke" and the aftertaste of bitterness had passed away, "Happy Joe" Lovering faced the situation bravely.

Instead of becoming a drone on the bounty of more provident members of his family, he determined to be a man and earn his own living.

Hence it was that certain society exquisites—sworn foes of vulgar toil—received something of a shock when they learned that Lovering, who used to be a leader in their rapid set, was working as an electrical engineer for the Boston Elevated Railroad Company and later as a salesman for a local jewelry concern.

Chapter IV.

She was a Boston clergyman's daughter—tall, dark and beautiful.

Her father had been one of the best beloved assistant pastors of the Warren Avenue Baptist Church.

Her parents were living apart.

Artists sought her as a model, and when she consulted one of them about her future, he pointed to the stage door as a sure gateway to fame.

And so she went on the stage.

Chapter V.

Coquelin, great Coquelin, most famous actor in all France, met her behind the scenes.

With effervescent enthusiasm characteristically Gallic, he took advantage of a moment when Sara Bernhardt wasn't looking and said:

"Most beautiful of women! Permit me to kiss your hand. Nevaire, no nevaire since I have been in this glorious Amerique have I seen one actress so lovely. For you, ma chere mam'selle, there is a grand future. Once more I kiss your hand and felicitate you on your beauty."

The girl was Elsie Richmond.

Chapter VI.

With the great Coquelin as a press agent Elsie Richmond quickly bounded into fame.

Beauty experts crowded the theatres where she played to "size her up" and compare their estimates with Coquelin's.

Conspicuous among them was "Happy Joe" Lovering.

He agreed with Coquelin.

Chapter VII.

Excerpts from a reporter's diary:

November 14, 1901—Elsie Richmond becomes Mrs. Joseph Lovering.

December 1, 1903—Elsie Richmond Lovering leaves her husband's home forever.

December 7, 1903—Elsie Richmond Lovering files a libel for divorce.

December 14, 1903—Lovering files a cross libel.

April 1, 1904—Case of Lovering vs. Lovering heard in the divorce court. Mud slinging honors about evenly divided.

April 2, 1904—More mud slinging at hearing of case of Lovering vs. Lovering. Both sides apparently following Talleyrand's advice to his friends, "Throw mud and plenty of it at your enemies. Some of it is bound to stick."

April 3, 1904—Lovering's cross libel dismissed. Decree nisi granted to the wife.

Chapter VIII

A trifle ruffled over the outcome of his case in the divorce court, Mr. Lovering sought comfort and consolation in the society of Miss Ida Sanborn, whose home was in Winchester.

She, too, was a girl of rare and striking beauty.

With deep-rooted fidelity her heart entertained the rapturous affection which Lovering implanted there.

In October, 1904, they were married.

Chapter IX

More pertinent excerpts from a reporter's diary:

March 1, 1905—Mrs. Elsie Richmond Lovering marries Will Stinson, the bicycle rider.

January 1, 1906—Rumors to the effect that Ida Sanborn Lovering says she built her airy castles of happiness on quicksand instead of a rock.

June 1, 1906—Affectionate relations between Ida Sanborn Lovering and her husband strained, dislocated, in fact, completely out of joint.

July 12, 1906—Mr. Lovering in a large French touring car calls at a private house in Nantasket and takes two young women out for a ride. The party has a midnight supper in Boston.

July 13, 1906—After settling bill for suite of rooms occupied by automobile party at Hotel Trafalgar in Massachusetts avenue, Lovering loses bank roll, which he said contained $1400. Police notified and detectives hunt for missing roll.

July 14, 1906—Lovering visits police headquarters and tells Chief Watts that the $1400 belonged to his employers.

July 21, 1906—Lovering again calls on Chief Watts to learn whether bank roll has been found. The Chief says "No." Lovering, extremely dejected, is leaving Pemberton Square when a deputy sheriff serves him with papers in a suit filed by his wife for absolute divorce with alimony. Mrs. Lovering alleges intemperance and opium habit.

Chapter X

IF the hypothetical fortune teller introduced in the first chapter of this love-laden but tempestuous history were to visit "Unhappy Joe" Lovering to-day and tell him that the next few months of his life will be the era of several nerve-racking experiences—if the hypothetical fortune teller were to foretell that, the probabilities are that Mr. Lovering would treat the prophet of evil with all the respectful consideration which his forecast would seem to deserve.

ELKS IN FROM THE WILD WEST MINUS 'PEGGIE'

Over 100 of the 106 members of Boston Lodge of Elks and their guests who went to the Denver convention, arrived back to-day. "Peggie," the Boston terrier belonging to Martin Sullivan and registered as the official mascot of the lodge, is hustling along in the wake of the Elks, trying to catch up with them. "Peggie" fell off the train into Kansas on the return trip. She was standing in the doorway of the special's baggage car and when the train slid around the curve, inadvertently fell out into the land of grasshoppers, locusts and cyclones.

At Osage City, the next station, the Elks wired back about "Peggie." A train hand found her by the track alive and sound. She was expressed to Passenger Agent Nolan of the Great Western, whose office is in the Old South Building in this city. She is expected there any time to-day.

The Elks brought a burro as far as Manchester, N. H., however, and a gander all the way home. The burro was thoughtfully presented to Brother Charles H. Hayes, of Manchester, N. H., who had it brought on as excess baggage.

The gander was the gift of the Ganders' Club of Denver to the Ganders' Club of Boston Lodge. He kept the burro company on the way home. He will be properly christened in the near future.

CENTRAL FALLS FORCES CRISIS IN GAS WAR

PAWTUCKET, R. I., July 26.—The proposition submitted to the Central Falls City Council by the Pawtucket Gas Company giving the consumers a reduction in the rate from $1.40 per 1,000 cubic feet to $1.10 for the first five years, $1.05 the second five and $1.00 flat for the third five years in return for an exclusive franchise for a period of fifteen years was turned down last night at the meeting of the Common Council.

A similar proposition was accepted by Pawtucket and the town of Lincoln, and Cumberland and the reduced rates are now in operation. The city will now, it is said, institute legal proceedings to compel the company to furnish gas to consumers at the same price as furnished to Pawtucket, Lincoln and Cumberland consumers, as it is claimed that to refuse would be discrimination.

It is also stated that in the case of the refusal of the company to grant the demand the pipes of the company will be ordered removed from the streets of the city, thereby preventing the company from sending its gas into the towns of Cumberland and Lincoln through the city of Central Falls.

The gas officials claim that such action will not worry them, as precautions have been taken to meet just such an emergency, as gas can be sent to those towns through mains laid through the outskirts of Pawtucket. The Central Falls officials say that the action taken was at the advice of competent legal advisers.

SIFT TO-NIGHT LOWELL TALE OF BRIBERY

Attorneys for Telephone Company Demand Probe of $1,000 Accusation.

Special to the Boston American.

LOWELL, July 26.—Mayor James B. Casey has called a meeting of the Board of Aldermen to-night to investigate the charge made by Alderman William J. Hayes Tuesday night that he was offered $1000 to change his vote on the granting of a franchise to the Merrimac Valley Independent Telephone Company. Mayor Casey's act is taken as the result of communication from the attorneys of the company in which they demand an immediate investigation.

Mayor James B. Casey said last night to a BOSTON AMERICAN reporter: "In relation to the letter of the New England Telephone and Telegraph Company, would say that the statement of Alderman Hayes is too serious to let pass unnoticed. I have called a special meeting of the Board of Aldermen for Thursday night for the purpose of giving a public hearing upon the charges made by Alderman Hayes. Hayes is to be present to substantiate his statements. I have also notified the officials of the New England company to be present."

Alderman Otis Allen said: "Before this thing is finished the people of Lowell will find out the inside workings of some of the deals that have been put through here recently. It is very probable that the deal by which the superintendent of streets was elected will be given an airing. It will be shown that $1,500 changed hands right here in City Hall and that some of the turncoats of Tuesday night were concerned in it. I am confident that one member of the board was offered $5,000 to vote against the bill and that he took it."

Alderman Crosby, who was one of the men who originally voted for the new telephone company and who shifted sides at the Tuesday night meeting of the board, said: "I voted to sustain the Mayor's veto on Tuesday night because since my last vote on this question I have found that there is a great deal of opposition to this dual telephone system. I know of no money being given by either side."

Alderman Livingstone, who also changed sides at the Tuesday night meeting, said: "I voted for the new telephone company at the last meeting because I thought it for the best interests of the public. Since that meeting, however, I have found that the people don't want a dual system. The majority of people to whom I have spoken were opposed to the new company and therefore I voted to sustain the Mayor's veto. I knew of no money being used by either party."

1,200 FITCHBURG WORKERS GET RAISE

FITCHBURG, July 26.—An increase in wages of 5 per cent has been granted to the 1,200 employes of the Darkhill Manufacturing Company's mills, the increase taking effect August 1. The company's product is fancy shirtings. The increase in wages is voluntary on the part of the company.

THAW LAWYER SAYS HARRY WILL GO FREE

Declares Client Will Go to Trial in October and Be Acquitted.

DENIES TALES ABOUT HIM

By Boston American Leased Wire.

NEW YORK, July 26.—"Harry Thaw is not a woman whipper. He is not a degenerate. He will go to trial for the murder of Stanford White, and I am absolutely confident that he will never go either to the electric chair or the mad house.—Statement of Clifford W. Hartridge, personal counsel to Harry Kendall Thaw, to the 'BOSTON AMERICAN' yesterday.

It was evident yesterday that Harry Kendall Thaw, who occupies a cell in the Tombs, charged with murder in the first degree for shooting Stanford White, was not alarmed at the statements and affidavits which the District Attorney's office has secured from women whom White sent to Europe to endeavor to break the Pittsburger's hold on Evelyn Nesbit, who has since become Mrs. Thaw.

Thaw and his personal attorneys even consider these affidavits as important links in the chain of evidence that they hope to bring before a jury to prove that Thaw, emotionally insane, was justified in shooting the famous architect.

This belief will not prevent a protest to the court on the charge that an order of Judge Blanchard was ruthlessly violated by Assistant District Attorney Turnbull, when he took the affidavit of Anna Crane, a masseuse, whom White sent to Paris in 1904, instructed, it is said, to spare no expense to break up the friendship between Thaw and Evelyn Nesbit.

Say Court Order Violated.

Thaw's personal attorneys consider the taking of her testimony a most serious violation of the court order, although they will not say what steps they will take to have the District Attorney or his assistants punished.

Clifford W. Hartridge, Thaw's personal attorney and old-time friend, in a statement made to an American reporter yesterday afternoon, announced most decidedly that his client would go to trial early in October. Without going into detail he denied many of the charges which have been made against Thaw since the shooting.

Never Whipped a Woman.

Lawyer Hartridge declares that Harry Thaw never whipped a woman and that he is not a degenerate. Mr. Hartridge is confident that the young Pittsburger can be acquitted before a jury, and yesterday seemed more determined than ever to resist any application for a commission in lunacy.

Despite the developments in the case, Thaw's immediate family still cleave to Judge Olcott and the defence which he has demanded from the beginning. Judge Olcott's position is this, according to a close personal friend, who is also a criminal attorney:

"We will first prove that Thaw is insane; after that any evidence that may tend to prove 'justification' simply adds strength to our contention of insanity."

Masseuse a Witness.

Stirred by the charges that the District Attorney's office was continuing an investigation, which Thaw's attorneys declare is most unjust to the prisoner and contrary to the law, which declares a man innocent until he is proved guilty, Mr. Turnbull of the Jerome staff yesterday let it be known at the criminal courts building that its mysterious witness of Tuesday was Anna Crane, a professional masseuse, who formerly treated Evelyn Nesbit when she was under the protection of Stanford White, and when he paid the bills.

According to the accounts which come from the criminal building, Miss Crane told a remarkable story. She made an affidavit that in Paris Harry Thaw maltreated his wife most cruelly. She says he whipped her, beat her, locked her in a room and made her life generally miserable.

Even in the District Attorney's office the Crane woman's statement is taken with a grain of salt. In the first place she was brought there by P. L. Berghoff, a detective, who was employed by Stanford White to shadow young Thaw, and whose chief source of revenue was cut off when White died on the roof of Madison Square Garden.

Order Was Still in Force.

Her affidavit was taken in absolute defiance of Judge Blanchard's order, which was designed to prohibit just such examinations. Judge MacLean, to whom the matter was referred, had not rendered a decision yesterday afternoon, and the restraining order was still in effect. One defence which the District Attorney might make for this violation was outlined yesterday. It was said he would utterly disregard the woman's testimony.

The importance of Roger O'Mara, the big ex-chief of the Pittsburg police, in the Thaw case, is continually developing. He is said to have the details of warning which Thaw received several months before the tragedy in the barroom of the Waldorf. According to this account a friend came up to Thaw and told him certain gossip which he had heard.

Thaw, acting like a mad man, grabbed the young club man by the throat.

"Now, you," he cried, "you'll tell me where you heard that or you'll regret it."

"You're making a scene, Harry," said the club man. "Meet me in an hour and I'll tell you all of it."

That same night, it is said, he was informed that Stanford White was circulating the stories about Mrs. Thaw which he had heard from various sources.

SAYS THAW STUDIED HYPNOTISM TO BREAK WHITE'S INFLUENCE

By Boston American Leased Wire.

NEW YORK, July 26.—Thomas J. Minnock, who asserts that in the Fall of 1902 he was connected with the American School of Hypnotism, No. 202 West Eighty-sixth street, has made a statement to the District Attorney that Harry Thaw was a pupil of the school, and that his avowed purpose was to obtain such control over Stanford White and a young woman, who was not named, as to break the influence which the former exerted over the latter. Minnock alleges Thaw told him that if he could not break White's influence over the young woman he would take White's life. According to Minnock, the American School of Hypnotism was conducted by W. G. Ferris, who called himself "doctor of suggestive therapeutics."

RIVALS RUSH TO BOOM AMERICAN'S NEW SERIAL

"Doubloons" That Begins in Next Monday's Paper Widely Advertised by Innocent Contemporaries.

THE BOSTON AMERICAN [illegible] the rights to this country to "Doubloons," the great English story of [illegible] murder which will begin [illegible] day.

For that reason the BOSTON AMERICAN feels deeply grateful to its newspaper neighbors in Newspaper Row which in several issues gave wide and generous prominence to the story of Mr. John Cox, an Englishman, who came to this country for the purpose of interesting the reading public in "Doubloons."

Mr. Cox put up at the Touraine on arriving in this city, and, with a view to making people think about doubloons in general and the large glittering coins in the story in particular, he inserted an advertisement in several of the papers announcing that he had lost a few of them on Washington street.

The following morning he was awakened early. Newspaper men wanted to see him and wanted to find out about those doubloons. Mr. Cox told them all he could. Captain Pollexfen (of the story) was mentioned. The name struck the reporters as being romantic. They wrote it down. The next day their stories appeared.

One newspaper of recently acquired dignity featured the doubloons on the first page with two columns of space. Its evening edition did likewise.

All About Doubloons.

Another journal, whose aim is always to be entertaining, made a large inside story of the sad loss, and followed it with another the next day. Other papers had several reporters employed on the job, and got up a really creditable article.

The AMERICAN, of course, appreciated all this deeply. While the circulations of the papers in question are more or less limited, still it seemed worth while that their readers should be told about Captain Pollexfen and the doubloons, and should develop an interest in the yellow boys that would lead them to follow their career further through the pages of the AMERICAN.

It has lately been discovered in the offices of the newspapers which printed the story that they will be compelled by the copyright laws to withhold from their readers any further information on the fascinating subject they have so artlessly alluded to. They have whetted an appetite which they have no dainties to gratify.

But in gratitude for what they have done the AMERICAN will now come to their rescue. The story of the doubloons will begin Sunday, and is thrillingly interesting from beginning to end.

And all the readers of the other papers who fail to find anything more about doubloons in their columns are invited to read the AMERICAN, where the complete story will be told in a fashion that is sure to hold attention.

And in the meantime the story of how the other newspapers were fooled, and at which people all over town are laughing as the funniest happening in many days, is itself worth telling in chapter form.

CHAPTER I.—LEMONS.

Sad to relate, the milk of human kindness has never flowed freely in the veins of newspaper contemporaries. They have never been given to publishing free advertisements of their rivals' enterprise. Therefore, when the BOSTON AMERICAN, at a big price, secured the American rights to the great English serial "Doubloons, A Thrilling Tale of Gold and Murder," and wished every man, woman and child in the country to know that fact, and that it would start publication this Sunday, it was realized that it would be useless to ask the other newspapers to publish columns of advance notices prominently on their front page. Then suddenly a strange thing happened.

CHAPTER II.—THE TIP.

Mr. John Cox, an English lemon merchant, arrived from abroad the other day. His only baggage consisted of an assorted crop of lemons. These were carefully packed in crates and delivered to his room at the Touraine. Next day an advertisement appeared in the reward columns of several papers for a Spanish doubloon which had been lost by Mr. Cox on Washington street.

This harmless little "ad" arrested the attention of the gentlemen occupying that exalted sphere known as city editors, lynx-eyed geniuses whom nothing escapes; men whose nose for news is so acute that they scent it often before it happens, and whose antipathy to lemons is so pronounced that they scorn a gin rickey because it has a lime in it.

Next instant in each office the star ferret of the staff was summoned to the presence of his acute chief, handed the "ad" and told to unravel the mystery lurking in it. Yes, between the lines there was evidently a "story." Grabbing copious supplies of copy paper, and with extra pencils sticking formidably from their vest pockets, they struck the trail.

CHAPTER III.—THE RISE.

It was morning at the Touraine, and Mr. Cox lay dreaming. Occasionally he tossed in his sleep and muttered "Doubloons," "Pirates" and other strange things. The sleep of the former lemon merchant was troubled. Before coming to this country the authors of "Doubloons" had told him the plot of the story.

Mr. Cox dreamed it was true, that the characters were flesh and blood, that the incidents in the great serial had actually happened, and that he had been sent to the United States to tell the Boston newspapers about the mysterious murder of Captain Henry Pollexfen in London, of the missing son and the hoard of pirate gold in Spanish doubloons which awaited him.

The telephone bell tinkled sharply, and Mr. Cox awoke with a start. The clerk informed him that a crowd of newspaper men waited him below. Several millionaires fled, but their fears were groundless, as the flower of newspaperdom was after [illegible].

CHAPTER IV.—HOOKED.

Mr. Cox sat at ease smoking an expensive cigar. As the smoke curled toward the ceiling he reached into a crate at his feet and, picking out a particularly choice lemon, he tossed it to one of the star reporters.

A weird, sad moan swept through the hall, as if the spirit of a wiser shade had spoken from the tomb, but the star reporter of a later generation heard it not. He was too busy taking voluminous notes of the remarkable case of Captain Pollexfen and the doubloons.

"Don't forget the doubloons," cautioned Mr. Cox.

"I won't," said the reporter, and true to his word the story of mystery appeared with nearly a column of free advertisement.

As the reporter arose to go Mr. Cox yawned politely and handed him another lemon.

"Thank you," said the pencil pusher.

"Oh, don't mention it," said Mr. Cox.

Then the bellboy announced another star reporter. A smile of welcome played over Mr. Cox's features.

"Have a lemon," he inquired.

"Sir, I am my paper's Mystery Commissioner," was the [illegible] reply.

"Ah," said Mr. Cox. "Have two lemons, then."

After the golden-hued fruit had been transformed into notes the "Mystery Commissioner" withdrew.

The mail is quick, the telegraph is quicker, but the telephone is instantaneous. It dashed through his brain. He lost no time getting his office on the wire. The story that went [illegible] over the 'phone electrified the editorial force. The tenseness of the situation caused the mucilage-bottle-topped building to sway in sympathy.

The legends on the wall which have ever been a guide to the young reporter, "Accuracy, terseness, accuracy," silently turned their faces to the wall.

In the excitement of the moment even the daily order of the chief to reduce salaries was forgotten. With painstaking care the advance notice of "Doubloons" was written.

"It is exclusive," gurgled the city editor.

"Paste it prominently in the Beat Book," said the scoop editor. "Mark it MUST; front page," said the managing editor.

And there, with two-column headlines, it appeared Monday morning. The evening edition was equally kind. When one considers that reading notices are about $2 a line on the front page one can appreciate the tears of salt now running down in rivulets from every pore of the building. It is rumored that the paper has since employed a [illegible] detective to find out how it all happened.

The last reporter to leave Mr. Cox was one of a leading editor's pets. He must have been writing on space, as he sipped in the startling news of "Doubloons" eagerly, and then wrote two columns about it.

CHAPTER V.—DIRGE.

Mr. Cox walked to the window of the Touraine room. A funeral procession was passing. A dirge smote his ears. He looked again and saw prominent past masters in the art of publicity with bands of mourning on their sleeves.

"We who are about to die, as the former champion of publicity promoters salute you, Mr. Cox," they wailed.

Don't forget to begin reading "Doubloons" in next Sunday's BOSTON AMERICAN.

Hay Fever
Quick Relief From Each Attack
Healing Antiseptic Liquid X-Zalia
Hay fever can be relieved by simply snuffing that liquid X-Zalia through the nostrils or putting a cloth wet with it across the face. W. F. Lakin, 30 Robertson St., Quincy, Mass., says: "I have had hay fever so badly my eyelids would swell and the air passages of mucous membrane of my nostrils and head became so inflamed I could not breathe when I tried to sleep. I finally found that healing that liquid X-Zalia freed me from such attacks." You, too, can do this by inhaling that liquid.
X-Zalia
Its antiseptic properties give relief, stop the eyes from watering, the nose from running and let you sleep, eat and breathe. A bottle costs you but 50c at any druggist's. This is no long-drawn-out three-year treatment. It brings you relief at once. In a week if you have another attack just snuff more X-Zalia through your nostrils. You can be sure you won't suffer long if you have X-Zalia handy. Try this simple form of hay fever, hay asthma and rose colds treatment.

Dying Baby Cries for Missing Father; 'He Would Come if He Knew,' Says Mother

Heartbroken Mrs. Lassard Asks Boston American to Aid in Locating Her Husband.

Little Blanche, Now Sick Unto Death, Missing Photographer's Favorite Model.

Special to the Boston American.

BROCKTON, July 25.—With tears in her eyes and voice trembling with emotion, her eyes sunken from worry, Mrs. Peter E. Lessard of 57 Provost street begged the BOSTON AMERICAN to assist her in locating her husband, who has been absent from home two weeks and has sent no word as to his whereabouts.

"Our three-year-old Blanche is sick, and the doctor says she must die," said Mrs. Lessard. "If the AMERICAN will only locate him for me and let him know that our darling is dying I know, if he is alive, he will come home.

"He started off two weeks ago yesterday, saying he was going up to the Springfield neighborhood to take pictures. He used to work in the shop, but got into photography and started out to go about the country taking pictures. He never was away without sending word before. He said he would be gone only two or three days this time.

"I cannot understand why he is absent now and has not sent word. I think he must have met with an accident or that something has happened to him.

"We had a good home, four lovable children, and Blanche was so bright and loved her papa so much. He was always taking pictures of her and she so loved to pose for him. The baby has been crying for her papa continually the past two days."

Lessard is thirty-five years old.

HEARST NAMED BY DEMOCRATS IN CONVENTION

Delaware County Delegates Enthusiastically Declare for Him as Governor.

Delhi, N. Y., July [illegible].—The Democratic convention for the county of Delaware convened here last night, every town being represented by two delegates. Lewis F. Raymond of Franklin was made chairman and John Moore of Walton secretary.

Among the resolutions adopted were the following:

"The Democracy of Delaware county, in convention assembled at Delhi, declare the following to be their views of the issues of the present campaign, etc.: Resolved, That the paramount issue in the nation is whether the people shall have the right to manage and control their own government, whether the Standard Oil Company, the railroads, the packers, the sellers of food and patent medicines shall obey the law or not, whether they shall control the government, or whether the government shall control them."

"Hearst Ideal Candidate."

"Resolved, That in the Hon. William Randolph Hearst, who, by his successful attacks on the Coal Trust, the Railroad Trust, the Sugar Trust, the Meat Trust and the gas and electric combines, has shown his courage and ability, and by his zealous efforts in every good cause in behalf of the people has proved his sincere friendship for their welfare and prosperity, we see the ideal candidate for Governor. He acted when recreant public officials neglected to defend the people against the encroachments of the criminal trusts.

"He rendered a pioneer service by blazing the way for the great reform movement that is today sweeping over every State of the Union. He is our candidate. We have no other choice, and we hereby instruct the delegates to the State convention to act as a unit and to vote first, last and all the time for William R. Hearst for Governor."

This county ticket, made up of Democrats and Independent Republicans, had already been placed in nomination by petition.

Action an Innovation.

The local leaders of the Independence League express the opinion that the county ticket named to-night will be indorsed by the league, which will give it three columns on the ballot this Fall. The action of the convention is an innovation, and is meeting with hearty expressions of approval.

Delaware thus joins Orleans, Tioga and Broome Counties in instructing its delegates to vote first, last and all the time for the nomination of William Randolph Hearst.

WAYNE NEWSPAPER HAS DECLARED FOR HEARST NOMINATION

LYONS, N. Y., July 26.—William Van Camp, editor of the Wayne County Press, the leading Democratic newspaper of Wayne County, has declared himself in favor of the nomination of William Randolph Hearst for Governor upon the Democratic ticket. The Press, yesterday, editorially, declared for the election of a delegation from Wayne County, instructed to vote for Mr. Hearst's nomination. The editorial made a profound impression upon the Democrats of Lyons and vicinity. The declaration of Mr. Van Camp caused considerable comment.

The editorial, published by the Press, is, in part, as follows:

"The overshadowing issue is 'abolish government by corporations.' No candidate identified with the past management can win. The successful candidate must be one who is so openly and notoriously opposed to corporate influences that no question as to his position can be raised.

"That man is obviously Mr. Hearst.

"That Mr. Hearst in his own person, by his record and achievements, represents this platform, is known of all men.

"If Mr. Hearst is nominated by the Democrats, he will be elected. This is conceded by every well-informed man, whether Democrat or Republican."

2 FISHERMEN LOST IN FOG

Two Boston fishermen were left in their dories off the Georges banks by the fishing schooner Flora S. Nickerson, which arrived at T wharf to-day. Captain Gethro Nickerson said that heavy fogs have hung on the banks for the past week, and though the men were lost in the fog last Sunday he hunted for them until Wednesday night, and only sailed away when all hope of finding them had been abandoned. It is believed that they may have been picked up by some other fishing schooner.

All fishing captains arriving in Boston today from the banks report the heaviest fogs in years.

News of the Theatres.

Half of the summer theatrical season is over, with no diminution in the size of the crowds which attend or in the enthusiasm awakened by the really fine productions which are now being offered in Boston.

Keith's Theatre

Toby Claude, who is making her debut at Keith's this week, is scoring the hit of a capital variety programme. The surrounding show is mostly of a comedy order, including Mr. and Mrs. Gene Hughes in the sketch, "Suppressing the Press;" Cliff Gordon, the German politician; Coakley and McBride, black-face comedians, and Zazelle and Vernon, in a comedy acrobatic pantomime. Harry Davenport, formerly of "It Happened in Nordland," comes next week.

Castle Square Theatre

Castle Square Theatre has revived "Faust" this week, and Boston opera goers are having an opportunity to hear Gounod's masterpiece splendidly sung by a company which would do credit to a far more pretentious production. Mme. Helene Noldi has shown herself a singer of remarkable power.

Tremont Theatre

Harry Bulger and his associates at the Tremont Theatre in "The Man From Now" are now in the third month of their phenomenally successful engagement. Seats are selling four weeks in advance and the Summer prices prevail. Regular matinees Wednesday and Saturday.

Globe Theatre

John Craig's company is drawing splendid audiences to the Globe this week in "Prince Karl." This will be Miss Young's last week with the company. At the matinee today souvenir photos of her are given to each lady. There will be a professional matinee to-morrow. Miss Lillian Lawrence arrived yesterday from Portland, Ore., and will make her first appearance with the company on Monday.

Palace Theatre

There are two funny burlesques and a splendid olio of vaudeville acts at the Palace Theatre this week and the house is doing a splendid business in spite of the warm weather.

Bowdoin Square Theatre

Charlotte Hunt has added another star to her crown of successes as a stock actress by her playing of the leading role in "Adrift in the World," the attraction at the Bowdoin Square Theatre this week.

Austin & Stone's Museum

Sig. Jonidine's Troubadours, including a half dozen pretty Spanish girl dancers, the Minstrel Maids, in a new production, and a score of bright vaudeville artists are presenting an attractive show at Austin & Stone's Museum.

Norumbega Park

Biggest vaudeville program of the season is offered at Norumbega Park this week. The Macarte Sisters in a trapeze and wire walking act; Walbert and his educated horse; Gavin, Platt and Peaches in "A Stolen Kid;" Tenbrooke, Lambert and Tenbrooke in a musical comedy sketch, Boyce and Black, comedians, and the kinetograph depicting the life of the cowboy is the strong program.

Greater Paragon Park

A whole day's entertainment for ten cents is what the management of Greater Paragon Park, Nantasket Beach, offers in the free open air circus. One of the best acts is "leaping the gap," by Myron Baker on a bicycle, the limit of sensationalism. The other acts are Rae and Benedetto, upon the revolving ladders, the Baker troupe of comedy bicyclists, and Will Hill, who walks on a wire 125 feet in the air. The Martland band concerts, the singing of H. F. Blaney and Johnny McGuire, free recreation grounds, free sand bumps and bamboo slide, and the electric illumination with the only electric tower in New England all go to give the visitor to Paragon Park much more than his money's worth.

Trips on the Water

Trains leave every ten minutes from the Atlantic avenue station of the Revere Beach & Lynn Railroad for Lynn, where they connect with the boats of the Lynn Steamship Company for the very pleasant water trip to Bass Point. Shore dinners, dancing, roller-skating, bathing, fishing and free outdoor aerial act may be enjoyed. Sheaf's Vaudeville Theatre is pleasing large audiences.

The four-hour trip to Provincetown by the steamer Cape Cod is rapidly growing in popularity. The boat leaves the wharf, 400 Atlantic avenue, at 9 a. m. on week days (Sundays and holidays at 9:30) and returns at 6:30 p. m., affording a stop of an hour and a half at Provincetown.

For those whose time is limited there is no vacation like the sea trip on the Plant line to the Maritime Provinces. Steamers leave Boston every Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday, and after a night and day at sea reach Halifax. The company's office is at No. 298 Washington street.

Thousands are now leaving New England and New York via the steamers of the Dominion Atlantic Railway line to Nova Scotia, the "Land of Summer Rest." The climate there is in marked contrast to the excessive heat of New England. Steamers Prince George and Boston leave Boston daily (except Saturday) from Long Wharf. The company's office is at 228 Washington street, or Long Wharf.

HOSPITAL IS PROSPEROUS

Remarkable growth and unparalleled prosperity has attended the Carney Hospital of South Boston, the forty-third annual report of that institution demonstrated. During the year ended December, 1905, 2,600 patients were treated at the hospital and 35,000 in the out patient department. At present thirty-seven Sisters of Charity, forty-three nurses and sixty physicians constitute the hospital corps. In addition there is a visiting medical staff, many orderlies, waitresses and porters.

The hospital has 200 beds with room for more in case of necessity. The present indebtedness due to improvements is $147,565. The expenditures for the year were $73,716.40.

FOREIGN LABOR CAUSES STRIKE

RALEIGH, N. C., July 26.—Several thousand factory employes, particularly cotton mill operatives, quit work at the manufacturing town of Hope Mills, Cumberland County, and the factories are all idle to-day.

The cause of the strike is the importation of a number of foreigners, mostly Italians, whom the management attempted to put to work. The cotton mills have been suffering for sometime because of lack of sufficient hands and part of the machinery in many mills has been idle the last year or two. The importation of foreign whites is regarded by owners to be the only solution.

CHARGED WITH MURDER, HELD WITHOUT BAIL

East Somerville Man Pleads Not Guilty to Charge of Killing Gilmore.

WIFE HEARS ARRAIGNMENT

Henry E. Parsons, charged with the murder of George W. Gilmore at No. 16½ Florence street, East Somerville, on Tuesday was held without bail for the Grand Jury of Middlesex County by Judge Wentworth to-day in the Somerville Police Court. He pleaded not guilty.

Parsons remained calm throughout the proceedings in court. He seemed to have recovered from the effects of drink, under the influence of which he was at the time of arrest. His wife was in the courtroom.

Nine witnesses were sworn for the Government. Parsons was represented by James A. McGeough and Police Captain Robert R. Perry appeared for the prosecution.

Story of Crime Told.

Medical Examiner Durrell testified as to the murder and the cause of death. Charles T. Fields, the only witness to the murder, testified that, with Gilmore, he drove to the Parsons house on Florence street to get the latter's trunk. Gilmore had formerly lived with Parsons and having paid his bill the day before, was to move his trunk to other quarters.

"We walked up the stairs and were stopped by a gruff voice demanding, 'Get out of here,'" testified Field. "Gilmore responded by saying, 'Good morning, Mr. Parsons.'

"'Get out of here!' was the response. We could see Parsons leaning over the balustrade. Gilmore was within a few feet of him. Parsons kept repeating his demand for us to get out. Suddenly he grabbed a musket and fired at Gilmore."

Man Instantly Killed.

Gilmore was instantly killed. The weapon was an old-fashioned army musket, bearing an inscription dated 1862.

Fields testified that he rushed back to his wagon and went for a policeman. Patrolman Burns, who arrested Parsons, testified to finding him lying on his bed, partially dressed, feigning sleep.

When the officer grabbed him Parsons started up. As he was unarmed he was not handcuffed and he made no resistance while being taken to the police station. He appeared dazed. Later he required medical attendance for relief from the effects of drink.

PULAJANES FOUGHT WITH FURY OF REGULARS

NATIVES IN LEYTE FIGHT CHARGED REPEATEDLY—GENERAL UPRISING IS FEARED.

Special Cable to Boston American.

MANILA, July 26.—Later reports from the scene of Tuesday's battle in Leyte place the killed and wounded among the Pulajanes at 150. After the first repulse of the bandits they attacked and charged the Americans three times, being repeatedly driven back until they finally moved south with some of their wounded.

Major Nevill, commanding the detachment of constabulary, has reported that the Pulajanes were dressed in khaki uniforms, probably cast-off clothing of the native soldiery, and that they numbered more than 500 and were armed with Springfield rifles, some Mausers and, he thinks, a few Krag-Jorgensens, similar to the weapons in use in the regular army, and bolos.

Fear General Uprising.

Army officers are at a loss to account for the many uniformed men among the Pulajanes, and think it is an indication that the uprising is of a more general nature than was at first thought. Whether there is any definite organization among them is not known, but there is considerable talk here to the effect that chiefs of marauding bands prefer to fight in the native dress.

The persistency displayed in the repeated attacks after meeting with such a severe loss in the first engagement is considered by army officers to be proof that the reinforcements will find they have a more serious task on their hands than keeping a few outlaws quiet.

Since the close of the Philippine insurrection the natives have never returned to the attack as they did in the fight Tuesday. The sending of troops to disaffected districts, where Ladrones and small bands of outlaws were causing trouble generally ended the trouble, as the irregular bands always tried to avoid meeting regular troops.

After an attack on their own initiative Tuesday, resulting in a heavy loss, the Pulajanes charged three times. From the small amount of news received from Major Nevill it has been learned that the supposed Pulajanes used American tactics in their firing. The fact has given rise to the theory that among the fanatics there are men who have served in the native scouts or constabulary.

LYNN UNIONS ENJOINED IN COURT ORDER

Judge Fessenden Grants Injunction Against Machinists Organization.

BOTH PARTIES CONSENT

After a long private conference between counsel and court, Judge Fessenden in the Superior Court to-day granted a temporary injunction to the Boston Machine Works Company, the Thompson Electric Welding Company, Stewart Bros. and William F. Embree & Co., all of Lynn, restraining Machinists' Unions Nos. 471 and 604 from interfering with their business.

The Judge appointed Charles F. Jenney as master to hear evidence and report the facts to the court, pleadings to be completed by August 12.

In rendering his decision, Judge Fessenden said that the injunction had been issued by the consent of both parties without prejudice to the rights of either party.

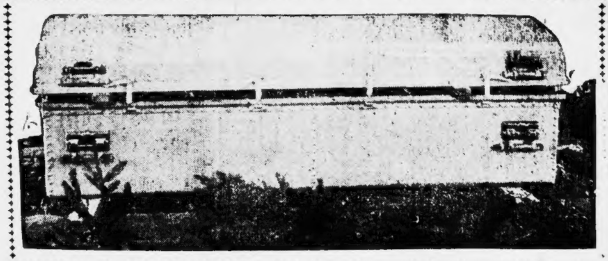
$60,000,000 WILL CONTEST; SAGE'S BODY IN STEEL CASKET



GHOUL-PROOF STEEL CASKET THAT CONTAINS BODY OF RUSSELL SAGE

Troy Relatives to Fight Bequest to Widow on Ground of Mental Weakness.

NEW YORK, July 26.—The body of Russell Sage, whose $60,000,000 will, leaving practically everything to his widow, is likely to be contested by relatives on the ground of mental weakness and undue influence, rests in a tremendous chilled steel ghoul-proof, $22,000 sarcophagus in Oakwood cemetery, at Troy.

If a legal battle comes over the immense estate left by the financier, his mortal remains will repose in a safe as stout and impregnable as if it held the sixty millions which Mr. Sage was unable to take with him to the Land Beyond.

The World to-day says, in regard to Mr. Sage's will:

Every dollar of Russell Sage's great fortune is left to Mrs. Sage by a will made in 1901, except an insignificant bequest made to Mrs. Fannie Chapin of Oneida, N. Y., an only sister, who died two years ago.

The will is to be read at the home of Mrs. Sage at No. 632 Fifth avenue to-morrow (Friday) and will be offered for probate immediately. The will undoubtedly will be contested by the Troy relatives of Mr. Sage, who will charge that the 1901 will was made after a mental breakdown on the part of Mr. Sage, and that Mrs. Sage exerted undue influence over him in the distribution of his wealth.

Not one dollar of the fortune is left to charity.

Fortune Is Only $60.000.000.

The fortune of Mr. Sage, which was popularly believed to be $100,000,000, and even thought to be greater by the best informed financial men of Wall street, amounts to only about $60,000,000.

The 1901 will of Mr. Sage, according to a lawyer closely identified with Mr. Sage's interests, was drawn by Almon Goodwin, of the firm of Goodwin, Vanderpool & Thompson. Mr. Goodwin died two years ago.

The will was personally sealed by Mr. Sage and handed to Mr. Charles W. Osborne, his confidential secretary and cashier, and has been in Osborne's possession ever since. A copy of the will was retained by Mr. Goodwin for his office files.

The will made many years ago by Mr. Sage, which was generally believed to be still in existence, was fully described Tuesday last. That will, which was very brief, covering a single page of manuscript, gave to his wife what would legally fall to her in the event he died without making a will and they had no children.

This would have given Mrs. Sage one-half of the personal property. The other half would have been divided equally among his next of kin. There are twenty-six of the "next of kin." Each of them under the old will would have received a little more than $1,000,000.

The Troy relatives of Mr. Sage were at the burial, but kept aloof from the burial party.

The lawyer who accompanied the Troy relatives of Mr. Sage announced that unless these relatives were generously remembered a contest of the will would be immediately inaugurated. He said that he would be in this city Friday, when the will is offered for probate. He said that on behalf of the Troy relatives of Mr. Sage he had been making a careful investigation of the later years of Mr. Sage's life and found that he had been practically of unsound mind for a considerable period.

Mrs. Sage Dismisses Dr. Munn.

Dr. John P. Munn, who is one of the executors of Mr. Sage's will, and who for 30 years was not only his physician, but his personal friend and adviser, as he was of the late Jay Gould, and Mrs. Sage are not on the best of terms, according to one of the lawyers who is closely identified with Mr. Sage's business affairs.

Mrs. Sage dismissed Dr. Munn from attendance on her husband soon after he left the city for his country place early in July. During all the time that Dr. Munn has known Mr. Sage hardly a day passed that he did not visit him, both as his physician and as his personal friend.

Dr. Munn, Charles W. Osborne and Mrs. Sage are the executors under the new will, and whether or not the dismissal of Dr. Munn by Mrs. Sage will have any effect upon Dr. Munn remaining as an executor is not known.

Mrs. Sage, who will have absolute control of the Sage millions, is a very charitably disposed woman. It is expected that much of the vast fortune will ultimately be disposed of by her in this way.

A dispatch from Troy says that the statement made that the grave of Mr. Sage was to be protected by a system of wires to reinforce the protection afforded by the chilled-steel coffin, was not confirmed by the authorities of the burial ground. It was said that the burglar-proof box of hardened steel was so perfect that the safeguard of an electrical alarm would not be needed.

Mrs. Sage Feared Body-Snatching.

The protection of an impregnable outer envelope was the desire of Mrs. Sage herself. She never got over the terror she experienced when the body of A. T. Stewart was stolen, and the negotiations with the body snatchers led to the city of Troy. The principal ghoul had attempted to retain former Postmaster James to enter into communication with Judge Hilton, and the final rendezvous was to be the town in which Mr. Sage spent his early business life. Mrs. Sage never forgot that fact, and immediately after her husband's death she was ready to entertain any proposition looking to the preservation of his grave.

Through the sexton and an [illegible] of the Collegiate Church the outer shell of chilled steel was obtained. It is the only coffin of its kind in the thousands of graves in Oakwood Cemetery. The secrecy surrounding its construction was lifted yesterday when it was exposed to public view.

The stencil mark on the panel at the foot read, "Burglar proof coffin, manufactured by the National Casket Company." The material is chilled steel rolled, and there is a locking device of four clamps on each side and two on each end, which is the secret of the manufacturers. Once the lid is in place and locked it is locked forever, and its weight is so great that to lift it from its bed would require the use of a derrick or the combined strength of ten men.

NEWS OF LABOR.

Politics is now engaging the attention of labor men, more so than any other one thing, especially since the call to arms of President Samuel Gompers and other officers of the American Federation of Labor. The many wage earners' clubs that have been organized and the many that are being organized promise to be important factors in the coming political campaign.

Already the numerous candidates for Congress and for the State Legislature and Senate are seeking the endorsement of labor men. It is expected by the leaders of the Wage Earners' Club of Boston that the candidacy of District Attorney John B. Moran for Governor will receive the endorsement of the convention of wage earners' clubs of the State, which will be held Tuesday, August 14, in Boston.

PIANO AND ORGAN MEN.

John Hamilton and C. B. Carlson, delegates from Piano and Organ Workers' Union No. 19, to the international convention at Chicago, report a plan by which the benefits will be increased, and also the weekly dues will be submitted by referendum to the members for their approval. The report of the delegates that three of the nine vice-presidencies and the office of international organizer were secured by Massachusetts men was received with applause. Frank H. Murray of Boston, formerly international president, was elected international organizer. He will begin his work August 1, when he will lend his aid to the joint efforts of the Boston union and Cambridge Union No. 44 in their plan of organization by means of daily shop meetings. The Massachusetts international vice-presidents are: C. B. Carlson of Boston Union No. 19; Patrick H. Wilmot of Cambridge Union No. 44, and A. B. Stein of the Leominster union.

48-HOUR WEEK FOR FIREMEN.

Firemens' Union No. 242 has several requests which will be presented to Superintendent Vahey at the pumping station, Dorchester, this week, relative to the conditions of the firemen employed there. Governor Guild has promised to consider at once the request that firemen employed at the Metropolitan water and sewerage stations be granted the forty-eight-hour week.

LABOR NOTES.

A special meeting will be held by Paving Department Union [illegible] night to decide on parading Labor Day.

[illegible] Union has voted to [illegible] Labor Union Labor day.

[illegible] Union No. 87 will be asked to vote on the question of holding an international convention of the masons at its meeting to-morrow night. The request is from St. Louis. It is ten years since an international convention was held.

BOSTON MAN TO AID GOMPERS

Thomas Tracy of this city is to be the campaign manager of the American Federation of Labor, acting under the instructions of President Samuel Gompers.

Mr. Tracy is a [illegible] calling, although he has not worked at his trade for many years. He lives at No. 706 East Fifth street, South Boston. For the last seven years he has been a member of the legislative committee of the federation, and as such has frequently appeared before House and Senate committees at Washington, urging the passage of the bills, the failure of which has aroused the antagonism of organized labor leaders to many of the members who seek re-election to the next Congress. He knows personally most of the members to whom labor has found it necessary to appeal in the past, and his judgment will be potent in the preparation of the "black list" soon to be completed.

Wonderland Manager's Life Twice in Danger in Balloon Trip High Above Park

F. E. THOMPSON SAVES LIFE BY MERESTCHANCE

Slips from Seat and Clings by Hands to Trapeze, 3,000 Feet in the Air.

FALLS NEAR FAST TRAIN

FLOYD G. THOMPSON
GENERAL MANAGER.
MARCEAU PHOTO

BOSTON AMERICAN CROWD AT WONDERLAND'S BIGGEST WEDNESDAY

General Manager Floyd G. Thompson is to-day the hero of Wonderland, after his thrilling balloon ascension from the grounds when he lost his seat and hung by his hands while 3,000 feet in the air and by the merest chance saved himself from falling headlong to the earth in the presence of over 20,000 spectators.

It was the most thrilling experience ever witnessed in this section of the country. The awe-stricken spectators crowded the chutes and every other vantage point and watched the balloon and its struggling occupant as it rose higher and higher in the air until it became a mere speck, expecting every instant to see his body come hurling with lightning-like rapidity through space to their feet.

His First Trip in a Balloon.

Mr. Thompson had never before made a balloon ascension. He had become interested in the work since Professor La Roux and his wife began their daily ascensions and yesterday decided that he would like to try the experience. Miss Amelia Garvin had been engaged to ascend with the professor's wife, but she gave way to Mr. Thompson who had refused to yield to the pleadings of his associates in the Wonderland company that he abandon what they considered a foolhardy attempt.

News of the attempt to dissuade Mr. Thompson from making the trip spread about the grounds early in the afternoon and this only excited the crowd the more. He was a trifle pale as he took his seat upon the trapeze and the signal was given for the ascent.

Mrs. Tiny La Roux occupied a separate bar and the signal was given at 6:15 o'clock. Before the big bag had gone up 300 feet a sudden lurch threw Mr. Thompson from his seat, but he was able to catch hold of the flying bar.

Spectators Were Awe-Stricken.

It seemed as if the immense crowd of spectators below held their breath from that moment and the silence of expectancy was terrible. No one thought that he would be able to hold on, as his body swayed about in the air and the balloon kept lurching.

Higher and higher went the struggling man, and it could be seen that he was trying to grasp the rope of the parachute which dangled near him. He would let go with one hand and reach out, but each time the rope eluded his grasp. His hat fell off and dropped into the grounds of the park. The signal to cut off from the balloon and come down with the aid of the parachute was given by Professor La Roux from the ground, but Mr. Thompson, who by this time was over 3,000 feet up and a mere speck in the sky, could not comply.

Again the signal was given, but to no avail. He could not reach the releasing rope and dangled there in the air, hanging by one hand from the swaying bar. Finally, just as a third signal was given by the now excited Professor La Roux, the rope swung into Mr. Thompson's left hand and he gave it a jerk.

Instantly the parachute separated from the balloon and Mr. Thompson began his descent.

Fell in Path of a Train.

Then a cheer broke from the crowd, the first one they had found breath to utter since the balloonists left the earth.

Immediately, however, there was a hushed silence again as it was discovered that Mr. Thompson was descending directly in the path of a Boston & Maine express train. He had escaped one danger only to fall into another, but a shift of the wind enabled him to avoid the train and he descended safely upon the marsh near the track.

Mr. Thompson was brought back to Wonderland in a carriage and was given a royal reception at the gates. He was cheered and carried to the circus arena on the shoulders of the crowd, but declined to make a speech, saying:

"I haven't got my breath yet. My heart has been in my mouth too long."

Later, to a BOSTON AMERICAN reporter, however, Mr. Thompson said:

"When I lost my seat at the outset, I looked down upon the crowd and thought it was all off with me. 'I'll never come out of this alive,' I said to myself.

Grabbed for Rope Three Times.

"I grabbed for that rope three times with my left hand before I could reach it, and I tell you my right hand and arm were pretty tired. I believe if I hadn't caught it when I did I should have had to drop. It was nothing but a miracle that let that rope swing into my hand, and it was all that saved me. I don't think I shall try going up in a balloon again just yet."

Mr. Thompson was examined by Dr. Oaks, the Wonderland physician, immediately after his safe descent, and it was announced that he was not injured in any way and after a few hours of complete rest would recover from the shock and excitement.

Mrs. La Roux went up a few hundred feet higher than did Mr. Thompson and landed safely from her parachute.

AMERICAN'S GUESTS THRONG WONDERLAND

Wednesday, the last day this week when free tickets clipped from the BOSTON SUNDAY AMERICAN were good, was a great day. Thousands who had saved their tickets for the mid-week day flocked by train and trolley to pleasant Revere to get a glimpse of Old Ocean, take a dip in the surf and finish the day in Wonderland.

The attendance yesterday afternoon and last night was really remarkable. The breaking of the backbone of the long torrid season seemed to put vim into people and there was a record-breaking rush to Wonderland. There isn't a doubt that thousands went to Revere and Wonderland last night who would not have dreamed of stirring out into the crowds on boat, train and trolley had they not felt invigorated by the bracing weather and the cool breezes which they knew were sweeping in from the ocean.

Several good things are offered for the rest of the week. The free circus in the lagoon is always changing its programme, while Professor Joseph LaRoux is arranging to have some thrilling balloon ascensions and parachute drops, which will take the breath of the thousands who go to Wonderland to see his big air ships sail away in the clouds.

RICH GIRL GOES AMONG LEPERS AT LOVE'S CALL

Beautiful Nellie White Now on Way to Wed Doctor Fighting Disease in Hawaii.

WINCHENDON, July 26.—At the call of love beautiful Nellie White, niece of ex-Governor John D. Long and heiress of the late multi-millionaire, Nelson D. White, has left her home and her wealth to travel 6,000 miles and take her place by the side of the man she then will wed, among the lepers of the Hawaiian Islands.

Her fiance is Dr. Walter R. Brinckerhoff, who is in charge of the United States Leprosarium at Malakai and who, with the enthusiasm of youth and love for his profession, has resolved to devote his life to the task of seeking a cure for the dread plague of leprosy. He has already won fame by his work during the smallpox epidemic in Boston in 1902, for which he was made a professor in the medical school, with pathology as his specialty. Then at the time of the smallpox scourge in Manila he was sent there as Harvard's representative. A few months ago he went to his present work.

The wedding is set for the second week in September. When married Dr. and Mrs. Brinckerhoff will spend a part of their time at the home of Miss White's sister, Mrs. James B. Castle, in Honolulu, but will give most of their days at the sanitarium in the effort to find the cure for the dread disease which shuts those afflicted by it off from the rest of mankind.

Whether Dr. Brinckerhoff and his bride will meet the fate of Fr. Damien remains to be seen, but they say death is insignificant, if only they can help poor, unaided, suffering humanity.

Only the Best Ingredients

Are Used in the Brewing of Pfaff's Lager

The Malt, Hops, Yeast and Water of each separate brew manufactured in every one of our plants are carefully analyzed in our large and perfectly equipped laboratory at 235 Heath Street., Roxbury, by chemists of the highest standing in the United States. These analyses are on file and open to the inspection of anyone who desires to see them. We extend a cordial invitation to all to visit the laboratory, the bottling houses and any of the plants where our products are manufactured, and would ask those who desire to do this to call at our Boston office, 15 to 17 Otis Street, and procure a letter to the Superintendent, which will insure their being able to inspect every nook and corner of the plant desired. We want you to see how PFAFF'S LAGER and our other products are brewed—and then you will drink no other.

CUMMINGS BANQUETED BY A.O.H. MEMBERS

His Policy Is "To Unite All Our People in Great Catholic Organization."

The policy of Matthew Cummings, the newly-elected National President of the Ancient Order of Hibernians, as declared by him at a rousing reception tendered by the members of the order in Woods Hall, Neponset, on his arrival home from Saratoga, N. Y., will be "to unite all our people in this great Catholic Irish organization."

Mr. Cummings came into Harrison Square Station at 7:29 last night, was met by delegations from four Dorchester divisions of the A. O. H. As he alighted from the train he was greeted by music, fireworks and tumultuous cheers, expressive of the [illegible] of his friends in his election to the national office in the order.

Mr. Cummings was then escorted to Woods Hall, where a reception and banquet followed. Thomas Horan acted as presiding officer and made a graceful introductory speech. When he came to the name of the new national president the gathering cheered and cheered. President Cummings said in part:

"I am now executive head of 184,000 men and women of Irish blood and extraction. I want to thank the State and county officers and delegates who attended the convention from this State. A more sincere and loyal lot of men I never met.

"A great many are anxious to know what my policy will be as a national president. I desire to say here and now at this first opportunity that my policy will be in the future as it has been in the past four years in this State, first as county president and then as State president—to unite all our people in this great Irish Catholic organization."

Others speakers were Joseph O'Connell, "Jon" O'Connell, Alderman James M. Curley, Mrs. Mary Cavanaugh, Joseph Daley and J. J. Goode.

DETROIT, July 26.—The Pilgrims play one game here this afternoon before moving on to St. Louis to open up their western schedule which lasts three weeks. There were seventeen players in the squad that arrived this afternoon every player but three under contract with the Boston association. Criger, Winter and Carrigan being the three to remain in the Hub.

Jimmy Collins is with the team and says that he expects to get back in the game before returning to Boston. In spite of the fact that the Boston manager has a bad knee he does not appear to walk with a limp.

Dinneen will probably work out this afternoon.

Although Joe Harris seemed to pitch the best ball of the season yesterday, the Huntington avenue team was closed off 3 to 2 by Bernhard. It was all done in the first inning, when the Indians registered three men, on one base hit. Boston's two tallies weren't much better, so there wasn't an earned run in the game.

Flick, first up for the visitors, pumped it down to Harris, who tossed the ball into the bleachers, allowing the former to score. Jackson drew and Lajoie bunted. Rossman fanned, but Armbruster dropped the ball, then threw it to right field. Jackson scored and Rossman made third on his fan, from whence he scored on a single by Congalton.

Heyden singled and was forced by Parent. Stahl singled and Parent was retired while trying for two bases. Stahl stole and Ferris was safe on a fumble by Flick. The two started a double steal and Stahl scored. Hoey scored in the fourth by beating out an infield hit and scoring on Bernhard's wild throw.

CHARLEY COMISKEY ANGLING FOR MANAGER

CANTILLON FOR SOX

MILWAUKEE, July 26.—Once more the report is being circulated that Joe Cantillon, manager of the Milwaukee Club, will not be at the head of the Brewer tribe of players next year. It is a well-known fact that Charlie Somers of the Cleveland Club and also Charlie Comiskey of the Chicago White Sox made Joe a grand offer two years ago to take the management of either of those clubs in the American League, but Joe refused at the time because he had partly promised Havenor, owner of the Milwaukee Club, that he would stay and help him out.

There is no doubt that Joe turned down a good thing in the major league, but it is understood now that an effort will be made to have Joe consider an offer to manage the White Sox in 1907. It is stated that Comiskey made a standing offer to Joe, but now the old Roman will go a little further and try to induce the manager of the Brewers to give the matter his careful consideration and break away from his Milwaukee position and assume a prominent place among the major league managers.

Joe has an interest in the Des Moines team of the Western League and it is figured that he could look after that just as well in Chicago, if not better, than in Milwaukee. He refuses to commit himself at the present time, but it will not be surprising to find the capable Brewer manager at the head of the White Sox next year. He would certainly be a big loss to the Milwaukee Club, as he has kept the Brewers in the race ever since taking hold of them in 1903. There are other good managers, but there are few of them who will get the work out of a team that Joe does. Milwaukee fans will be hoping that Charlie Comiskey does not take away the manager of the Brewers, although they have nothing but the best of wishes for Joe should he decide to leave the good old beer town.

Real Reason of Postponement of Bout With Murphy

SPIKE ROBSON STABBED

NEW YORK, July 26.—It was learned yesterday that Spike Robson, the English lightweight, who was matched to fight Harlem Tommy Murphy at Philadelphia last Monday, had to postpone the match because he was stabbed in the shoulder by Ike Bradley, another English fighter, who was working with Robson at his training quarters. Robson would say nothing about the wound, and merely gave as an excuse for not meeting Murphy that he had injured his shoulder in the course of his training.

The stabbing occurred a little over a week ago. Robson was at his training quarters at the time, and got into a dispute with Bradley, when the latter suddenly picked up a knife and plunged it into his shoulder. Ike Bradley reached America a short time ago, without any money and few friends. He stopped in to see Robson at the training camp, and the latter pitied his brother Englishman and gave him a job as sparring partner. They are both Yorkshire tykes.

Then Robson used his influence with the Philadelphia promoters to look up some fights for Bradley, and he was matched with Tommy O'Toole. O'Toole won the bout and Robson then tried to get another match for Bradley. The club offered Bradley some matches, but he showed no inclination to take them. Robson heard of this, and when he saw Bradley at the quarters rebuked him for not accepting the opportunities offered. In the course of their arguments he stepped up playfully to Bradley and assuming a boxing pose gave him a little slap on the side of the head. Bradley seized a knife from a table and stabbed Robson on the shoulder. Robson's manager wanted to have Bradley arrested, but Spike objected and he was allowed to escape. Bradley is now in New York.

The date of the Murphy-Robson bout has been changed to August 6, by which time the little Englishman hopes to be in shape again.

After fair success on the circuit the Tenneyites get back to the Hub to-day and will once more gambol on the South End grounds and in the couple of weeks they are home make a great stab to get out of the end place.

For a starter the team is up against it playing the Chicago Cubs, the present leaders and heralded pennant winners, though the Tenneyites gave the Windy City boys a surprise the last time they were here and broke even with them and there is no reason why they shouldn't repeat.

The Cubs have been playing the top brand lately against the Giants and Pirates and must be going several pegs better than when last seen in the local arena.

Tenney's men are noted for tumbling the best teams and always put up the strongest fight against the clubs high up in the list.

The team comes home in fairly good shape. Brown will be around again shortly to take his turn wearing the mask and the pitching force is doing nobly.

Probably little "Cy" Young will open the home series and it's about time he showed some of that fine work he was displaying last season.

LOOKS LIKE EXTRA RUN FOR THE GLIDDEN CUP

By J. C. Kerrison.

WATERVILLE, Me., July 26.—The tie which binds the honor men in the contest for the Glidden and Deming trophies is strong indeed. Indications are that there will be a closing contest for honors at the conclusion of the tour proper at Bretton Woods.

The worst roads of the entire 1,134 miles have been met and conquered, and yet there are still fifteen machines tied for honors in the former and two in the latter contests. So evenly are they matched that there is but little chance of the field being materially decreased unless the dreaded rain puts in an appearance.

Yesterday all the cars showed up to perfection, there being but three to receive black marks, namely, Schulz, in the Marmon, who lost seventeen; Kirkham, in the little Maxwell, who fell down for seven, and Owen, with the Cleveland, who captured two black marks and made his exit from out the charmed circle of honor men.

This fall was, however, through no mechanical fault, being due entirely to tire troubles, he having no less than four punctures in one control. Then he was but two minutes late.

Schulz, who re-entered the arena with his Marmon yesterday, is deserving of great credit, as the previous day he had broken his front axle. Wayside repairs were made at a blacksmith shop and the party drove on to Jackman, reaching there at 3 o'clock yesterday morning and starting out early in the run.

Kirkman lost his points through having to change springs and axles. One of the exciting and dangerous experiences of yesterday was the turning turtle of the Olds, referred to in yesterday's AMERICAN. Despite her severe experiences the Olds is still in first class order and started out with the field this morning.

Pistch, with the Packard, withdrew from the contest this morning, he preferring to tour and not contest.

Rich, with the Lozier, has not been heard from since yesterday morning, when he was reported as having stopped his transmission. He is considered out of the contest.

The citizens of Waterville gave the tourists as grand and royal a reception last night as has been accorded since they left Buffalo. All of the local clubs threw open their houses to them. The band gave a special programme in front of their quarters and a theatre party was given in their honor. The town is handsomely decorated with flags and bunting. As each car entered the checking station its occupants were treated to delicious, cool and acceptable lemonade.

The run of to-day is 105 miles in distance, being to Rangely Lakes, over roads it is said fully the equal to those enjoyed yesterday.

Two additional checking stations have been established for to-day's run, making five stations in all. The schedule has not been changed a particle, the running time being on a basis of fifteen miles an hour.

As usual Van Sicklen was the first man to get away, and at his heels came Wing of Boston in the Marmon. Wright with the Knox was close at hand, these three men seemingly having a tacit understanding that they shall always lead the field.

The first checking station, Skowhegan, nineteen miles away, was reached in short order, all cars being on time and in excellent condition.

On receipt of telegraphic advice to the effect that hotel accommodations for the entire party had been secured at Rangeley the committee this morning voted to carry out the programme as originally arranged and remain at Rangeley to-morrow.

The official standing of the cars in the Glidden and Deming events to date:

BERGER AND KAUFMANN MUST MEET IN THE RING

BY W. W. NAUGHTON.

SAN FRANCISCO, July 26.—Sam Berger hesitated quite a while about turning "professional," giving his friends to understand that he believed he could devote his time to better use by going into business.

Sam did not mean to convey the impression that he considered a prizefighter's existence the life of a dreamer. He knew better than that from his experience as a sparring partner with old Bob Fitzsimmons, as also from his amateur contests with resourceful Rodenbach and whole-souled Jim Casey.

What Sam meant by going into business was the embarking in some line which involved the buying and selling of merchandise and which promised surer returns than trading punches with other broad-backed fellows in a roped inclosure and on a resined floor.

The die is cast and Sam is steeped in professional pugilism to the topmost wrinkle of his classical forehead. He may still have doubts as to whether fighting for a living is being "in business," but he will be kept busy anyhow; that is, if he tries to accomplish half of what is expected of him.

Sam made his debut in Philadelphia recently and won golden opinions from the wise men of the East through his clever showing with Jack O'Brien. Whether it be a good omen or bad, Berger certainly caused a far better impression than did big Jim Jeffries when the now retired champion cut loose for the first time in one of the big cities beyond the Rockies.

Jeffries boxed in New York with Bob Armstrong and was voted a duffer. When thoroughly tried he showed the experts who had passed judgment on him that they were all wrong.

Keeping right along he retired with the reputation of being the greatest heavyweight that lived in this or any other age.

It does not follow because Jeffries, who received no encomiums from Eastern judges at the outset of his career, compelled his critics later to pronounce him "the greatest ever," that Berger, who has started with the good opinion of the experts of New York and Philadelphia, will eventually wind up in what is known as the dub class. The comparison simply suggests that it does not do to attach too much importance to a first performance.

Slurs have been cast on the O'Brien-Berger bout in Philadelphia, there being a suspicion that the affair was framed up with an eye to a longer and better paying contest in California.

Being simply a suspicion without an atom of evidence to support it, the "knock" may be taken for what it is worth. Giving Berger the benefit of the doubt, and being fortified in doing so by the manner in which those at the ringside viewed the bout, as well as the enthusiasm the San Francisco boy's work evoked, it is made to appear that Berger held O'Brien safely in the kind of milling that O'Brien has served an apprenticeship to—to wit: A six-round bout.

It is more than likely that Berger and O'Brien will meet in San Francisco before many weeks have passed. Berger has certainly earned a right to such a meeting and has worked into a position where he can, with proper justification, say to all challengers, "Stand aside, please, until I have settled with O'Brien."

No matter how the O'Brien-Berger melee turns out, a match between Al Kaufmann and Sam Berger is sure to come on the boards. These young fellows are rival San Franciscans and San Francisco wants to know which is the better fighter.

Kaufmann was cruelly beaten by O'Brien, but according to that judge of fistic experts, Billy Delaney, the young blacksmith has improved ever since. Before the Kaufmann-O'Brien go Delaney said he had nothing to judge Kaufmann by. "I want to see how he behaves," said Delaney.

In Kaufmann's previous contests there were no "'tween rounds." Al generally finished his man in a round. What Delaney wanted was to size up the cub heavyweight as he sat in his corner in the rests. The fact that the youngster happened to be engaged in a losing fight did not mean the end of his career with Delaney.

THOMAS LOOKS LIKE A GOOD HUSKY BOXER

Joe Thomas, the California welterweight, looking every inch a fighter, stopped at the BOSTON AMERICAN office to-day on his arrival in the Hub to have some of his ring poses taken, which are the first seen in the East.

He comes here to meet Tommy Sullivan of Lawrence at the Lincoln A. C. next Tuesday night and the event is scheduled as one of the greatest ring battles that has occurred at the club.

There is good reason to believe that there will be the hottest kind of action when the two get to mixing it, as both are possessed of free hitting and when they do land, the wallops are the wearing variety.

The boys are to weigh in at 150 pounds, which is an easy mark for Thomas as he can scale 142 if the conditions call for it and he won the amateur championship of the coast in both the lightweight and welterweight divisions before he entered the professional ranks.

Thomas is not the least boastful about his ability with the mitts but has plenty of confidence and a determined jaw which attests to his gameness in a contest.

"I expect to beat Sullivan as I have not lost a decision yet," said Thomas, "and come East as I beat everything on the coast in my class."

"I start training right off and will wait till after the bout before visiting my relatives in Beverly, as I want to get down to business immediately in preparing myself.

"I won't have to train hard to take off any weight and have found that the eastern climate agrees with me. I was born in Beverly but left there at a very early age and have spent most of my life in California.

"I made good in Philadelphia and beat Joe Grim worse than any other fighter ever did. I knocked out Jack Clancey, who is a protege of Jack O'Brien and classed as one of the toughest men of his weight.

"I [illegible] to win the match with Sullivan, as it [illegible] mean a lot of prestige for me in the [illegible] where I have not been heard so much [illegible] on the coast."

With Thomas is Harry Foley, the California [illegible]weight, who is one of the cleverest boxers in the country and he will [illegible] to the training of Thomas.

EIGHT ENTRIES FOR KING'S CUP RACES

NEW YORK, July 26.—Eight entries have already been made for the race for the King's cup, which is to be sailed on the cruise of the New York Yacht Club off Newport on August 8. These are J. Rogers Maxwell's schooner Queen, W. S. Eaton's schooner Taormina, Arthur F. Luke's schooner Corona, Harry L. Maxwell's sloop Yankee, Commodore Cornelius Vanderbilt's sloop Rainbow, H. F. Lippitt's sloop Weetamoe, E. D. King's sloop Neola and Cleveland H. Dodge's cutter Hester.

The rating of all these yachts, except that of the Queen, have been filed, and as measurements must be filed before the race, the entry of the Queen is not considered complete. The Taormina is a new schooner and her rating is 81.29. The rating of the Hester is 59.93. The ratings of the other yachts are well known, as they have been racing regularly.

The entries for this race will close at 10 o'clock at the town house of the New York Yacht Club on August 5 and at the Newport station at 10 A. M. on August 6. Measurements must be filed at the time of making the entry, and no yacht will be allowed to start that has not been measured and that is not entered in time. It is expected by the regatta committee that there will be between twenty and twenty-five starters.

Two extra courses, triangular in shape, have been laid out off Newport, making four now that the committee can use. The two new courses are 35¾ nautical miles in length, and one of these four makes it possible to get a windward leg no matter from what direction the wind blows.

BAT DENIES GANS FIGHT

SAN FRANCISCO, Cal., July 26.—Battling Nelson has wired a denial of the story sent out from New York on Sunday, which seemed to speak authoritatively of a match between Gans and Nelson at Colma. Nelson says:

"Coffroth can never be connected with any fight in which I am the principal until he settles the money he is trying to welch with. I will keep my word with Graney in September, provided the inducements are satisfactory."

THE LEWIS-CORBETT GO.

Young Corbett has been watching Harry Lewis's progres, and there has been some talk of these two meeting at the Lincoln A. C., of Chelsea, Mass. But Corbett is only a bystander at this moment. He ventured to say that Lewis was good enough to beat Terry McGovern and Jimmy Britt both, but said nothing about his own case.

YOUNG 'MATTY' LOOKS LIKE A COMING CURVER

NEW YORK, July 26.—Indications are not wanting that Hank Mathewson, brother of the great Matty of the Giants, will develop into a fine pitcher. He may never reach the high standard set by the man who beat the Athletics last Fall, but he has all the earmarks of a successful box artist, and in another season should be able to take his turn in the box with the other men on the New York team.

Mathewson has not been pitching any ball for the Giants recently, but he has not been idle by any means. On the contrary, he has been very industriously engaged in pitching good ball against men who know how to hit and play a game that is second only to that of the big leaguers.

Mathewson has been pitching for the strong semi-professional teams in this vicinity, and his work has been excellent in all respects. He has been letting his opponents down for five and six hits to a game, and has shown a command of the ball, a speed and an assortment of shoots that have baffled the hitters he has faced.

In the Philadelphia Quaker Giants Mathewson has faced about as dangerous a lot of hitters as can be found outside of the major leagues, and the youngster had little difficulty in deceiving such good hitters as Patterson, the team captain, and Munroe, the great third baseman.

BAY STATE A. A. STARTS ON ANNUAL TOUR

The second annual Summer tour of the Bay State Automobile Association of Boston started this morning from the association clubhouse at 8:30 o'clock. The first car contained the confetti to lay out the course, followed by the pilot car. Twenty-three cars have entered in Boston, while others will join on the way up. The tour to-day will proceed to Newcastle, where the balance of the day will be spent in games, etc.

Members of the New York Motor Club and Long Island Automobile Club arrived in Boston about 5:30 last evening from Hartford, Ct. A. L. Kull of the Wayne Automobile Company was in charge of the party.

Some of the New York party went to Bretton Woods to watch the auto climb, and also the arrival of the Glidden trophy party of the A. A. A.

The main purpose of the Bay State Automobile Association tour is to meet and welcome the A. A. A. Glidden tourists at Bretton Woods at the conclusion of their 1,000-mile prize tour. The tour, after leaving Boston, will be in charge of the Bay State Automobile Association and the latter's runs and tours committee.

The run continues until August 3.

HART ILL WITH FEVER.

LOUISVILLE, Ky., July 26.—Marvin Hart's trip to Australia, where he was to fight "Bill" Squires, will not be taken at present, as Hart contracted fever on Salt River, where he was working.

TENNIS FIELD NARROWS DOWN AT LONGWOOD

Seven matches in singles and seventeen in doubles were decided yesterday in the tennis tournament at the Longwood Cricket Club, bringing the competition for the Longwood Cup to the fifth round and second round for the Eastern doubles clearing up all but three contests in the championship.

The field left in the singles event is a remarkably strong one, and the four matches, nearly all of which will be played to-morrow, will bring out some of the best sport of the week. The survivors are C. H. Bull, Jr., W. J. Clothier, E. B. Dewhurst, Robert Leroy, I. C. Wright, J. H. Behr, F. G. Anderson and J. D. E. Jones, and all are seasoned players.

STARTS TO TRAIN AUGUST 8.

LONDON, July 26.—All the members of this year's Cambridge crew, with one exception, who is abroad, have agreed to train for the race with Harvard September 8. They will start work on the river August 6, so as to have a full month's practice. The race will be from Putney to Mortlake, distance about four and one-quarter miles.

PEITZ SUSPENDED.

PITTSBURG, July 26.—Heine Peitz received notice from President Pulliam yesterday of suspension, pending an investigation of the affair with McGinnity. It is understood a similar notice was sent to McGinnity. Peitz will leave for New York to-night to plead his case.

DRIVING MATINEE GAINS IN FAVOR

It is easily to be seen that the weekly matinees of the Boston Gentlemen's Driving Club are gaining great favor with the ladies and children for an outing, besides the regulars that enjoy seeing the trotters matched in speed.

This was a marked feature yesterday, while from distant cities were the well known matinee followers, C. W. Parks of Chicago, and A. E. Perrin of New York.

It was anticipated that Lord Roberts would trot a mile against his record of 2:12½, but on account of Hon. J. M. Johnson's arm being in such condition through his toss from the sulky when the stallion ran away on the day of Sweet Marie-Wentworth race, it was impossible for him to think of driving, and the event was off.

The best contest of the afternoon was in Class C. Arnold Lawson carried off the honors with Maid O'Dreamwold, but C. H. Belleden made him know that he had a horse race by the exciting finishes he demonstrated with Dash. The best time made was 2:19.

Frank Hall was lucky in winning with Miss Strike. The second heat looked as if C. Saunders had it all his way with Osceola, but the latter then threw a shoe and a portion of his boots at the important moment, and that settled it.

George A. Litchfield secured a blue ribbon with Auto Glow, losing the second heat to Cora Wilkes. The latter was slow in getting away from the wire, but came the last half in a dangerous manner. Best heat was 2:32¾.

It was easy for L. R. Peck to carry off the honors with Remsen Robinson. The fastest heat in 2:25¼. Mr. Belleden won the prize for members driving the closest to three minutes. He had the mount behind John Shepard's Altro L., and rated the mile in 3:09¼.

Millard Drinkwater stepped the futurity candidate, Cochato, a workout in 2:19½ so easily that one had to have the watch on to even suspect he was trotting that fast.

MAY MEET IN PROVIDENCE

There is yet a chance for a Grand Circuit meeting coming off at Providence this year.

Advices from there state that the interest on the mortgage on Narragansett Park came due last Monday, and the running horse people failed to make good the payment to the holder of the mortgage, Fred E. Perkins.

While up to the present time Mr. Perkins has not made a move toward foreclosure proceedings, yet in a few days action in that respect will be taken.

With the passing of the property back to Mr. Perkins, a Grand Circuit programme will at once be announced. On account of the late date there will not be a Roger Williams, or Park Brew stake, in the list, but purses of suitable sizes will be given to take all the horses from the Readville meeting, beside additional entries from parties nearby.

MOTOR BOATS AT MARBLEHEAD

The Eastern Yacht Club will give the owners of motor boats three days of good sport this week. To-day, Friday and Saturday there will be races for these boats off Marblehead, with the start at 10:30 a. m.

Don't Be Forever Trying to "Amuse" Young Children

FOR many children the strenuous life begins before they are short-coated. They have too many interests, too much xcitement, and a superfluity of playhings. Before an infant is two days' ld somebody begins to shake noisy attles before his terrified eyes to see hether he will "take notice."

He is tickled to test whether he can augh, taught to play "peep-bo," and o say "mum-mum," long before he is nterested in anything but mealtimes. A heavy mortgage is placed upon a aby's brain by making him use his ntelligence prematurely.

His nerves are very tender, his brain ike a sensitive plate. It is purely rtificial to persuade him that he can't be happy without a painted monkey n a stick, or that he is bored unless omebody perpetually beats a big drum o amuse him.

No Nerve-Strain

The lamblet is allowed to frisk about the field when it wants to, to lie down and sleep and exist with perfect freedom. Nature's mothers never interfere with their young, never force, stimulate or influence their inclinations.

Babies who are "let alone" are rarely peevish, fractious or sleepless.

These things result from the perpetual nerve-strain, bustle and excitement so often found nowadays in the nursery.

Constant excitement has a bad effect on young children. No nerve-strain of any sort should be put upon children under seven years of age.

They should eat, drink and be merry after the natural fashion of lambs and calves.

Many children begin going to circuses, pantomimes, etc., at two years of age. Mothers ought never to permit such amusements till a child is much older. The simple joys of nursery or garden are all that a child of that age should or could enjoy.

Excitement of this sort is a serious mortgage on health, brain and nervous system.

The nervous, high-strung child of to-day is produced in nurseries which are "forcing-houses" for the young. Many mothers are delighted if their babies walk, talk, or cut a tooth two months before they should.

A Danger Signal

As a matter of fact precocity of this sort is a danger signal. It is the result too often not of healthy growth and development, but of overstimulation.

If an infant shows a precocious desire to talk, take notice, and walk before he has reached the natural age of such baby accomplishments, his ambitions should be gently restrained. He is attempting feats beyond his powers, and the price will have to be paid later on in the form of a feeble, nervous system, puny physique or backward brain.

The child which shows such wonderful promise before it is seven years old is very apt, unless kept back, to fizzle out like a spent rocket. He is a victim of nerve-strain in the nursery.

CHAPTER LXXVI.—Continued

Copyright, 1906, by American-Journal-Examiner

"I SAY, I hope you've brought plenty of cash with you, old Haggard; we shall need it, I tell you! We're going to celebrate our partnership to-day.

"Even you, seasoned man of the world as you think yourself, shall look back on such a day as you've never spent before, with the excitement of a year crowded into a day!" he laughed noisily.

"Drunken fool!" muttered Haggard, with not even the wit to pretend to be sober."

He was relieved that he had got the man away from the office. In his present excited state there was no knowing what incautious admissions Grieve might not be betrayed into. He must get the man home, where he could not do any mischief, as oon as possible; that fact was clear. In is present condition it was useless to reach prudence to him.

As these thoughts ran through his mind nce again Grieve, with this wild outburst on his lips, turned as if still possessed by that strange fancy he had spoken of to his companion, and looked back at the doorway of those offices where the years had been spent that he was leaving behind.

"What a queer fancy that was!" he again muttered, as if to himself. "The feeling that I had passed through that door for he last time! Wonder why it came over e so vividly? It was all nonsense, of ourse!"

And he again laughed boisterously, turnng to his silent companion as the two men alked forward:

"Haggard, old man, you ought to be grateful to me for having dragged you out to-day; who wants to be cooped up in a stuffy office? It's well enough for clerks—let the beggars earn their salaries; you and I are going to see life. Put Wynter out of your thoughts, man, and try to look cheerful! I don't want to look at a face s gloomy as a death's head when we're oing to take our fill of pleasure—of life!" Life?

CHAPTER LXXVII.

Grieve's Progress

THERE was a cafe at the corner of the street.

"You're coming along in," cried Grieve, insistently. "You'll never get rid of your fit of the blues until you've had a drink. That'll set you right."

"No, not here," said Haggard, quickly. "There's a better place we shall be coming to soon."

It was a place where frequently he and Wynter had dropped in for lunch; he was afraid of meeting some acquaintance there.

"This place was good enough for you and Wynter," cried Grieve, suspiciously; "are you ashamed of being seen here with—your new partner?"

Haggard looked at him.

It would not be safe not to humor Grieve just now, he reflected, as he glanced into the sullen, flushed face from which, with the quick transition of a man in Grieve's state, the traces of exuberant good humor were gone. He looked potentially dangerous if thwarted.

"All right," Haggard said, briefly.

They went into the bar.

At the lunch counter a man was standing whom Haggard knew—a customer of the firm. He crossed over to Haggard and shook hands, looking rather curiously at the flushed, loudly talking man with him, whom he remembered as the confidential clerk of the firm. It struck him as rather odd that Haggard should be hobnobbing with him in a bar.

"Terrible news about your partner, Mr. Haggard," he said. "Wynter was a man I had a great respect for; he'll be missed. Straight as a die; a man it was a pleasure to do business with."

"It was a great blow to me; when I saw him the day before he sailed I little thought I was saying good-by to him for the last time," Haggard said, on tenterhooks. Would Grieve have the sense to keep his mouth shut?

Partners

"A great blow to both my partner here and myself," interjected Grieve. "What will you take with me, Mr. Fendall?" rattling the money in his pocket ostentatiously. "Come, I insist, Fendall."

"Nothing, thank you," said that gentleman, looking still more curiously at Grieve. "Must run back and finish my lunch. Rather in a hurry. Partner, did I understand you to say?"

"Mr. Grieve," Haggard hastened to explain, "proved himself so useful to the firm in his previous capacity that one of the last arrangements of my late partner was to promote him to the position of manager. Partner was, of course, Mr. Grieve's little joke." He tried to frown furtively at Grieve as he spoke.

"Ah, I see," said Fendall. "Must run away now." And he departed with a nod.

"You drunken, incautious fool!" whispered Haggard, his smouldering rage breaking out. "Why in your own interests haven't you the sense to keep your mouth shut instead of making people talk, as you will! Are you coming, or do you intend to stay here, soddening your wits still further? I'm going."

"Look here, keep your wool on, Haggard. I spoke without thinking just now—can't say more, between gentlemen, eh? But Fendall's such a pompous ass I wanted to surprise him a bit, and, after all, I am your partner, you know!" said Grieve, taking the rebuke in unexpected good part.

"Don't you think you'd better go home now and lie down?" suggested Haggard, when they were outside on the pavement again. "You're rather excited, you know. You'll be better at home, eh? Come; I'll go with you as far as your place. Where is it you live—Harlem?"

"Harlem?" echoed Grieve, contemptuously. "In my new circumstances, I've turned my back on Harlem, I can tell you! No more Harlem for me! I'm not drunk—why the devil should I go home? I'm going up Broadway now in a hansom. Take you, if you care to come. But please yourself. Don't you fancy I don't know my way about without your help?"

Haggard was beginning to be afraid. He felt he dared not leave Grieve alone to-day. The man appeared to be incapable of keeping his counsel when he had been drinking. Haggard dared not leave him to-day.

"All right, I'll come," he said.

And yet he could not be this man's keeper day after day, the thought came to him as he followed Grieve into the hansom, and the rubber tires bore them swiftly onward—and would Grieve be more to be trusted tomorrow or the next day? The man had lost his mental balance over this change in his fortune—this change effected by spying and blackmail; he would not be content with one outburst and then settle down after it to work, as capable a manager as he had been a clerk. Haggard was a judge of character.

He sat deep in his sombre thoughts, whilst Grieve babbled foolishly.

"No; no more Harlem for me, thank you," Grieve was saying. "Cut my old diggins yesterday. Just now I'm putting up at the Rillington Hotel, while I look about me. Been to a first-class tailor, you see; togged me out all right, hasn't he? My maxim is: Good clothes, good address, good name; eh, Haggard?—and with money you're as good a gentleman as any one."

Haggard did not answer. What an insufferable cad the man was. Had Haggard not been in the grip of fear he would in his sheer weariness and disgust have left this "beggar on horseback" to ride to the devil his own way; but the element of fear came in to complicate the case. He dared not leave the man in this state.

"By the way, don't forget whenever you should be calling for me that I'm known at the hotel as Mr. de Graves," went on Grieve. "I've had a few cards printed; they look O. K., don't they, old man?"

Grieve pulled out an elaborate card case and laid a card on Haggard's knee with a flourish. Haggard's sombre eyes read it: "Mr. J. de Graves."

Undue Familiarity

"My name really—the good old family name, you know, so I'm quite entitled to use it," Grieve said importantly. "Only it got corrupted into Grieve—like Sevenoaks into Snooks. Naturally I don't wish people to associate me with having been a clerk. The hotel people wouldn't be half so deferential as they are if they knew; so I think I was wise to assume the family name. No one knows me at the Rillington as anything but Mr. de Graves, a private gentleman of means, and they couldn't be more deferential if I was a millionaire."

Even in his disgust and weariness Haggard realized that this snobbery run mad—giving himself these ludicrous airs—would have had its humorous side had it not been for that element of fear that fettered him to this man.

He could picture Grieve flinging money about extravagantly in the hotel—money wrung from him by blackmail—in order to impress the hotel attendants, to buy their obsequiousness. Men who would take his money and laugh the moment his back was turned, seeing through this hollow pretender; such men encountered far too many of the real stamp to be deceived by such a poor pinchbeck.

Haggard suddenly flicked the card off his knee to the floor of the hansom. How much more of Grieve could he endure? His nerves were on tension.

"Suppose you drop calling me 'old man,'" he said, in a very low, quiet, intense voice, keeping a tight rein on himself.

"I'm going to show you a bit of life," said Grieve presently—"take you to my club. Came across a man the other day, one of the right sort—a captain, he said he was—who introduced me, made me a member. We must be close there by now. I couldn't tell the cabby to drive up to the door; it's a club of the Q. T. order," with a knowing laugh.

"EYEOLOGY," illustrated with "eyeographs," is the most captivating fad of the Newport season, so far. The promoter and originator, Mr. J. H. P. Brown of New York, is in Newport, and promises to stay until this popular amusement is on its feet, for Mr. Brown is the authority on eyeology. It is now good form to exchange eyeographs with friends.

These photographs of the eye are indexed and placed in a small album, to which is attached a short set of rules for reading the eyes; but, for a perfect character summary, all rules fail, and inspiration through concentration is sought after.

The game consists in guessing owners, and, strange to say, not more than one person in ten is able to pick out his own eyeograph. The young people turn over pages of eyeographs till a particularly fascinating one appeals. Then, with enthusiasm, the contestant in eye lore makes conjectures or authoritative statements.

While this discernment of character is being pronounced, the owner may turn to the index, to find that the eyes in question are those of the person speaking, or, perhaps, those of his dearest friend, who may possess the very opposite qualities to those stated.

Some of the correct eyeology character delineations that have been made are as follows:

The Duchess of Marlborough has a coy expression.

The width between Mrs. Willie K. Vanderbilt's eyes show her to be broadminded.

Mrs. Nicholas Longworth's eyes have an occult expression, and Mrs. Reggie's are oriental.

The Duchess of Manchester's eyes indicate a dreamy temperament.

Mrs. Alfred Gwynne Vanderbilt's eyes say she is practical.

A thoughtful concern lurks in Mrs. Clarence Mackay's eyes.

Mrs. Phil Lydig's eyes are childish in frankness.

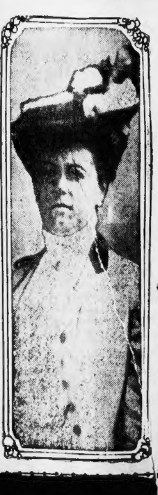
Mrs. Anthony J. Drexel has truthful eyes and a fearless temperament, and Mrs. John R. Drexel's eyes are sad, but never hopeless.

Mrs. Joe Widener's eyes are universally conceded to have the most mirthful quality.

The quiet eyes of Mrs. Cornelius Vanderbilt are the most puzzling of all.

SHOPPING YESTERDAY? IS THIS YOUR PHOTO?

Identify This Picture and You Win $2



ABOUT every photograph of a woman shopper the camera man catches these days is being identified with startling regularity and with surprising promptness.

The photograph in Tuesday's paper, which was reprinted yesterday, was identified yesterday noon by Mrs. Elizabeth A. Kelley of No. 8 Custer street, Jamaica Plain.

You remember the snapshot. It showed Mrs. Kelley and her little daughter just as they came out of Timothy Smith's Roxbury store, laden with bundles.

Mrs. Kelley says she was amazed when she picked up the BOSTON AMERICAN and found her likeness in print. And when she found a prize of $2 was attached to the identification she was delighted.

"Pretty lucky, wasn't I?" asked Miss Hattie W. Wilson of No. 12 Bond street, Boston, when she received her prize for identifying the little snapshot of herself in Monday's BOSTON AMERICAN.

"I know just when the photo was taken," she continued. "I saw the photographer snap me as I came out of Butler's store on Tremont street. I didn't know what it all meant until I saw my picture in the paper. It's the luckiest shopping trip I ever made."

Moral: Look out for the camera man! He may get YOU any day about noontime.

HOUSEWORK REQUIRES SYSTEM

THE best housekeeper is not she who spends the whole day slaving in the house—"doing the work," she terms it; muddling is the correct expression. A woman with method gets through her domestic duties, even without the aid of a servant, by midday, or soon after, and is ready to take a walk, make a call or two, or rest comfortably with a book or her needlework.

Her home is tidy, and she is always neatly and consistently dressed. Meals are prepared tastefully and economically, and are always punctually served.

Although no one enjoys a pleasant chat more than she does, she avoids anything like idle gossip, and no one can tempt her to waste the early morning hours in talking over her neighbors' affairs.

A good housekeeper also avoids debt. She insists upon paying for everything as she gets it, and sees that she gets good value for her money.

QUICK POTATOES

WASH and peel some potatoes, cut them into slices of about a quarter of an inch in thickness, throw them into boiling water and, if of good quality, they will be done in about ten minutes.

Strain off the water, put the potatoes into a hot dish, chop them slightly, add pepper, salt and a few small pieces of fresh butter and serve without loss of time.

Married Men Do Altogether Too Little Courting

By Beatrice Fairfax

THERE is no use expecting woman to be philosophical on the love question.

The man who imagines that his wife will be satisfied to take his love for granted does not know woman—that's all.

Before marriage the man never wearies of reiterating his love. The woman lives in an atmosphere of petting and praise, an atmosphere that all human beings take very kindly to.

Then after marriage the man, practical and unsentimental, would like to settle into a life of routine, where love is taken for granted.

But the poor little wife has become used to being made much of and misses it cruelly.

Naturally, a man cannot dwell always on the heights of sentiment; he cannot be forever telling his wife how much he loves her; but he can show a little bit more tenderness than the average married man seems inclined to do.

In fact, many a man who undoubtedly loves his wife gets into the habit of speaking to her in a manner which he would never dream of adopting toward other women.

He would not dare speak to the cook so dictatorially, for she would leave if he did.

He would be amazed and indignant if you hinted that he did not love his wife.

However, many husbands who consider themselves models of husbandly devotion have extraordinary methods of showing their love.

There was once a man who got married, and after he had been married several years his wife said to him:

"You do not speak as affectionately to me as you used to, Hal. I fear you have ceased to love me."

"Ceased to love you!" growled the man. "There you go again. Ceased to love you! Why, I love you more than life itself. Now shut up and let me read the paper!"

And I haven't the slightest doubt that gentle-mannered hubby considered his wife a very lucky woman in being married to a man who loved her so truly!

The reasonable wife does not expect that her husband should be always assuring her of his undying devotion, but she would like him to go back just once in a while to the dear old days of courting.

She would like her new gown to be praised, and when she tires herself out in getting up a nice dinner she would like to know that her efforts were appreciated.

He can still say pretty things to other girls if the opportunity arises, so why leave out the girl who loves him best of all?

Not many of us have the happy knack of making pretty, loving speeches to the ones we love, and yet we all know how pleasant it is to hear them ourselves.

Some time, when it is too late, we would give anything on earth to tell our dear ones how much we love them.

The thing to do is to tell them now, to let no opportunity of assuring them of our love and appreciation pass by.

Love is the thing that most of all needs encouraging and fostering.

The least neglect blights it. It cannot thrive on silence.

Treat it with reverence and gentleness and it will tarry long, but neglect and treat it harshly and it will open its wings and fly away.

What's the Secret of Woman's Charm?

DO not overrate your power of mind and underrate that of your pretty frocks, says a modern philosopher, and while he may excite the scorn of some strong feminine minds, there is not a little evidence that many women of emancipated aspirations have already taken unto themselves this gem of wisdom.

To be a reformer in a pretty frock requires particular powers of mental detachment, but let the pretty frock work its end while the pretty wit is exercising its utmost cunning, and there is no knowing what victories may be gained for "the cause."

Charm is the most potent word in the galaxy devoted to women. It is, in fact, the whole thing, though different girls have varying expressions of charm.

One girl is extremely clever, well read, speaks two or three languages, and some people will think her adorable, though she may lack even a hint of physical beauty.

The next girl's charm will lie in her sweet expression, her smile, her gentle manner, although her nose be pug and her complexion poor.

The neat girl's exquisite grooming and smart manner of dress make her seem almost a beauty, although if you study her features she may be plain.

Some girls have a fund of fun and good nature that wins people with whom they come in contact, irrespective of their other qualities. Talents are sometimes more charming than beauty.

If a man knows that his wife expects him to succeed, that she expects him to stand at his post and do his duty, no matter how hard it is, and that she will think him a coward if he gives up his job because the work was unpleasant, or there were difficulties in the way, it is easy to foretell what the future of that man will be.

A fussy woman may be a prim old maid, but is probably an untidy wife, always very unpunctual, for she has "no time" to do anything, her faculty of fuss retarding her actions.

She never spares herself, never idles a moment, and thinks nothing can be done so well by anyone as by herself. Hence she is quite unnecessarily overworked, over fatigued and frequently fractious.

The husband goes to his club; the children are so accustomed to continuedl scoldings that they become either hypocrites or unusually unmanageable and heedless of rebuke.

To some extent they deserve pity, for they are teased about their food, clothes, health, exercise, games and lessons. Nothing is done without plenty of fuss and discussion, and many harmless pleasures are lost.

ADVICE TO THE LOVELORN

By Beatrice Fairfax

NOT VERY SATISFACTORY

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

I am a young girl and have kept company with a gentleman, whom I love very much, for two years, but for a few months at a time he sometimes stops calling and even tries to avoid me. This puzzles me very much as when he does call he treats me very kindly. This happened twice, and I am at a loss whether or not to ask him to explain these strange actions. My parents think I should. Kindly advise me in your column whether or not I should, or what is the best road to take.

HAZEL.

I THINK he is a very unsatisfactory friend, and if I were you I would not pin great faith in him. Greet him politely when he calls, but do not make too much of him. Do not consider yourself bound to him in any way. Perhaps, if he saw that you were becoming interested in some other man, it might keep him up to the mark.

BETTER WAIT A WHILE

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

I am a young man eighteen years old and love a girl two years my senior whom I have known for two and a half years. I have not mentioned love to her, and as I will not be in a position to marry for four years, still do you think I would do right to ask her if she loved me or would you wait two or three years so that she would in no way feel "tied down." I feel quite sure she loves me, but I don't suppose I ought to ask her until I told her how I felt toward her, and this I do not care to do for the reason stated above.

PERPLEXED

I THINK it would be better to wait until you have a more assured position. It would not be fair to ask her to confess her love unless you were ready to reciprocate. I a few years time you will know definitely what your prospects are and it would be much wiser to wait until then.

A SELFISH SISTER

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

I am a young girl nineteen years old, and am secretly engaged to a young man that loves me dearly. We have kept our engagement secret until now because I have an older sister. Now, my gentleman friend does not want our engagement to be secret any longer, because his parents love me dearly and want me to come up to their house. He also wants me to come up to his store often, as he can't get away evenings. Now, dear Miss Fairfax, all I want is to have your good advice. What am I to do, as my sister has refused me her sisterly love and friendship? Although I have promised her not to get married before her.

AN ANXIOUS LOVER.

MY dear, I think your sister is exceedingly selfish. You must not sacrifice yourself for her in such a fashion. Announce your engagement. Tell your sister that you are sorry, but that you owe a duty to your fiance. I am sure she will be reasonable about it.

BEST TIME THEY EVER HAD, WRITE AMERICAN'S TOURING TEACHERS

First Letters Arrive Telling of Trip Across and Sights of Stratford and London.

The first letters from the prize-winning teachers who are touring Europe as guests of the BOSTON AMERICAN have just been received and are published below.

By Rachel Rosnosky,
Lewis School, Roxbury.

LONDON, July 17.—The twenty teachers, the guests of the BOSTON AMERICAN for a tour of Europe, arrived in London a day after the big Arabic was docked at Liverpool. They were in the best of health and spirits, and wore as deep a coat of tan as if they had been spending a month at Nantasket instead of a delightful week crossing the Atlantic.

Not one of the twenty was seasick. As one of the teachers said, "We didn't even get a roll except the one we had at breakfast with our coffee."

The voyage from Boston to Liverpool was extraordinarily calm. The sun shone all the way and the weather was so fine that the teachers were denied the excitement of the fog whistles off the Banks of Newfoundland. The whistles did not blow because there was no fog.

The voyage was spent promenading the Arabic's long decks and in playing shuffleboard. Some of the teachers developed as much skill at playing shuffleboard as did John D. Rockefeller when he came to Europe a month ago on the Deutschland.

First Glimpse of Land.

The tourists got their first glimpse of land when they saw the isolated lighthouse amongst the waves off Brow Head. They were all on deck and watching with interest the rolling, treeless, green hills of old Ireland, as the ship passed along the coast from Brow Head to Queenstown. At Queenstown they were all hanging over the rail watching the stewards shooting the mails from the gigantic ship down to the tiny tender.

The Arabic arrived at Liverpool in the morning, and the tourists had a splendid view of the broad Mersey from its mouth to Liverpool. They found the port of Liverpool as full of ships and tugs as the harbor of Boston. Boston harbor, however, they found, was much more beautiful and picturesque than Liverpool.

Their first experience of the custom houses of Europe was very pleasant. The customs inspectors at Liverpool were very polite and accommodating. As a mere formality they asked for a few handbags and trunks to be opened. They were opened only, and the inspectors chalked their symbol on them and let them go. Not a rude hand was thrust into any bag or trunk, and the contents were undisturbed. The sun was shining, making even ugly Liverpool look gay.

Saw Warwick Castle.

From Liverpool the tourists journeyed through the most beautiful part of England into Warwickshire. They stopped at Warwick for several hours, seeing ancient, historic Warwick Castle. The beautiful Countess of Warwick was not at home, but her stewards obligingly permitted the teachers to visit the private apartments of the castle, from which tourists usually are rigidly excluded.

They all admired Sargent's portrait of the Countess of Warwick, which shows her in the heyday of her beauty. It was painted when she was the most beautiful woman in England. They were proud to see that the portrait painted by a fellow Bostonian had the place of honor amongst all the costly works of art, ancient and modern, in the great picture gallery.

From Warwick next day the tourists journeyed to Stratford-on-Avon. The journey from Warwick to Stratford took them through the most beautiful pastoral scenery in all England. One of the teachers declared that it was even more beautiful than the Jerusalem Road. At Stratford they visited Shakespeare's birthplace and Anne Hathaway's cottage. All the kodakers in the party took snapshots of these fascinating sorties.

Visit Corelli Cottage.

The literary members of the party did not forget to visit the beautiful rose-covered cottage of Miss Marie Corelli, the famous novelist, who is one of the guardians of Shakespeare's memory in Stratford. The party had lunch at the Red Horse tavern, and wrote their autographs in the visitors' book, which contains the autographs of Washington Irving and all the great men and women of America who have visited Stratford during the past sixty years.

Arrived in London the teachers had their first experience of the London "'bus," for they drove from Paddington Station to St. Ermin's hotel in a 'bus. It was a novel experience, and they enjoyed the spectacle of twilit London as it unrolled before them. They seemed surprised to discover that although it was nine p. m. it was still as broad daylight as at seven p. m. in Boston.

They spent three jolly days in London, seeing all the sights from Westminster Abbey to the Tower and from Hampton Court to the Cheshire Cheese. They went to France after three days in London.

SAYS ALL ENGLAND IS KEPT AS TIDY AS BOSTON COMMON

By Laura Lamprey,
Winthrop School, Melrose.

WE find England perfectly delightful. Everything in the country is so green. All the land seems to be as well kept and is as tidy as Boston Common. The roses everywhere are beautiful. I've never seen anything like them. They seem to grow everywhere without any care whatever.

And everything here is so strange and different from at home. Even the people speak differently. Sometimes it seems as if the servants and boys, especially in the country, did not understand English at all.

Warwick was the first castle we saw. It is so old and so grand one could spend a week studying it. Rare! England with its castles is certainly delightful. We feared we would have rain, because we've heard English weather was showery, but we had only one shower in London and that lasted only an hour. It is delightfully cool here, although the sun is almost as hot as in Boston.

Seek London Bargains.

London is such a vast city I fear we shall not be able to see all of it. We've seen, however, all the leading sights. We will go shopping, for we hear that this is the season of bargain sales in London. [illegible] don't have bargains every Monday, as at home, but only for two weeks in midsummer. We shall be careful about our shopping, because we know we can buy innumerable things just as cheap in Boston despite the horrid old tariff.

Everybody has been very nice to us, and we are having the time of our lives. It's not all fun because we are studying and learning a lot of history and literature. It is fine to see all the places mentioned by Shakespeare, Thackeray, Dickens and all the other famous writers. It makes their work living again.

We've all had the best of health. Our trip across the ocean was delightful. It gave us a splendid rest and we stored up strength and health for the fatigues of sightseeing on the continent. We look forward to our stay in Paris with great joy. Then we have Berlin, Vienna, Amsterdam, Rome—all the great historic cities we've been reading about all our lives. It will be just fine!

HEARST'S BOSTON AMERICAN

WILLIAM RANDOLPH HEARST

80 AND 82 SUMMER ST., BOSTON, JULY 26, 1906

Governor Guild's Interesting Talk on Labor Legislation

He Omitted, Somehow, to Tell His Hearers About What Happened to the Factory Overtime Bill or His Own Record Upon That Particular Lobby Slaughter

There was a meeting in Boston, a day or so ago, of the officials of the Bureaus of Labor Statistics throughout the country, and Governor Curtis Guild, Jr., made an interesting speech, beginning with the words:

> Seldom has a year passed in Massachusetts in which so much has been done to uplift conditions of labor as in 1906.

Governor Guild's speech must have been very interesting to the officials from the various States. But they could not appreciate it as well as Massachusetts people, to whom it appeals as not only a politically clever arrangement of words, but a composition possessing distinct humorous qualities.

Governor Guild told of the extension of the truant law, of the provisions for the raising of the standard of education of minors in the mills, of the beginning in the establishment of State employment bureaus.

He mentioned the law requiring better sanitation in foundries, which every foundryman knows would have been killed but for the fight made for it by this newspaper—although the Governor did not mention that fact—and one or two other minor matters of labor legislation. The most striking part of his speech was near the end, when he said:

> I might also add that the opposition of both executive and Legislature to the proposed backward step in permitting overtime work in the department stores at Christmas time seems to indicate with certainty that NEXT year we shall take the further steps of forbidding overtime work for women or children at any time.

This reference to an overtime bill seems to have been a rather unfortunate one upon the Governor's part. It raises unpleasant memories of what happened to the overtime bill during the last session, and HOW it happened, and what Governor Guild's position was upon the matter.

The Governor's speech would have been more complete, and LESS DECEPTIVE, if he had touched in greater detail upon this matter. It wouldn't have made so good a political document, to be sure, but it would have given the distinguished visitors a better insight into Massachusetts legislation than the references that the Governor made.

For instance, would it not have been illuminating if the Governor had said:

> There WAS an overtime bill introduced at the last session. It had the support of the laboring people of the State, without exception, but the Arkwright Club (made up of the cotton mill owners) did not wish it, a condition all politicians will appreciate. The House passed it, expecting it to be killed in the Senate, and the Senate passed it on one day, but killed it on the next by an extremely clever trick.
>
> I had been confronted by a serious problem. One Republican Governor had been defeated partially because of his veto of a similar bill. On the other hand no Republican Governor can afford to offend the Arkwright Club. When the Boston & Maine lobby was secured to assist in the killing of this excellent bill its members used as an argument with good Republicans that I did not wish to be embarrassed by having to sign or veto it. Certainly I did not authorize this statement. Dear me, no! But it helped, with other things, to get the bill killed very satisfactorily.
>
> The labor people were displeased and asked me to request the Legislature to reverse its action. I told them I was friendly to them, but that such action was impossible, as I would be untrue to my oath of office if I attempted to interfere with the legislative branch of the government. And I shook hands with them very nicely and they went out of my office very peaceably and quiet.
>
> Yes, it is true that later I sent messages to the Legislature asking it to change its acts in regard to late liquor selling in Boston and the railroad merger bill. But that, as you will readily understand if you are in practical politics, was quite a different matter. And after this was all over I took the one man whose efforts were most successful in killing the overtime bill, and appointed him Justice of the Supreme Court.

Of course you understand that Governor Guild DIDN'T say all this, or anything like it. Wouldn't it have been interesting if he had? How the labor statistics people from all over the country would have applauded him.

But Governor Guild said at least ONE true thing. He said that NEXT year an overtime bill will be passed. He might have added that it will STAY passed.

The people of Massachusetts will attend to that. They are also extremely likely to see to it that the man in the executive chair will be one who will neither fear the issue, turn down the labor representatives who visit him to ask for justice, nor highly reward those who assist in the lobby-killing of good measures.

The Death of Russell Sage

Americans Should Think and Speak Kindly of Him. His Life Was Blameless Morally. In Business It Was HONEST

Russell Sage, full of years, and leaving behind him many vaults full of money, has left us and gone into that other world—to meet different aims and many surprises, we may be sure.

The life of this old man has been made the object of much criticism by unthinking writers. And some of this criticism is renewed at his death.

It seems to this newspaper that the attacks repeatedly made upon Mr. Sage and the criticism of his memory now are unjust and in very bad taste.

Leaving out all question as to the disposition that he has made of his fortune, what is there in Russell Sage's life that anybody has the right to criticise or to blame?

He did not advertise himself as one giving away money. True.

But have the Americans been made into a nation of beggars? Do they judge their able men solely by the amount of alms that they throw to the people from whom they take millions?

Are we so fond of having the very rich give us back a penny or two out of every dollar taken from the general wealth that we can see nothing but this GIVING?

It should be remembered that Mr. Sage led an absolutely exemplary and moral life.

While he was an eager and ceaseless money-maker, there never was any charge of indirect dealing, of disregard for law in any of his transactions.

He was a business man pure and simple. He accumulated a great fortune.

AND THIS NEWSPAPER BELIEVES THAT IT WAS AN EXCELLENT THING FOR THIS COUNTRY THAT THE HUNDRED MILLIONS WENT INTO THE POCKETS OF RUSSELL SAGE INSTEAD OF GOING TO FIFTEEN OR TWENTY TYPICAL BROKERS.

We do not say that the making of money is the noblest occupation conceivable in man.

But Mr. Sage used his talents at least legally, in an orderly way.

He went along the present path of American development, in which money-making is the one great feature.

He found his pleasures as men should do—in a modest, quiet home life among friends of long standing.

He did not inflame the minds of the poor with stupid, vulgar ostentation of wealth.

He did not seek the society of the parasites that live noisily, without producing anything.

It is a thousand times better that he should have collected in Wall street the hundred millions of dollars said to have been owned by him than that the ordinary, dissipated, vicious run of Wall street gamblers should have got the money.

The name of Russell Sage is that of a man exemplary in his life, honest in his dealings, faithful in his friendships. FREE FROM THE VICES AND THE DISREGARD OF LAW THAT HAVE SINGULARLY DISGRACED WEALTH IN THIS COUNTRY OF LATE.

Those whom he leaves behind can well be proud of the character of Russell Sage

OH SAY, WHAT A CINCH THAT BIG SMITH FELLOW WAS FOR ME AT PINOCHLE LAST NIGHT!
1
HE HAD ALL THE BIG MELDS, BUT IN SPITE OF IT I BEAT HIM EASILY,—SUPERIOR PLAYING YOU KNOW!
2
YES, HE'S TOO EASY FOR ME! HE CAN'T PLAY A LITTLE BIT WHEN IT COMES TO PLAYING WITH A MASTER OF THE GAME LIKE I AM!
3
I DIDN'T GET ONE DECENT HAND, BUT,—WHY I MADE HIM LOOK LIKE A MONKEY!
YOU DID EH!
4
SMITH? WHY PSHAW! I CAN PLAY!——!—!——!—?—!
WHOM DID YOU MAKE TO LOOK LIKE A MONKEY? NOW YOU JUST TELL HIM THE TRUTH WITHOUT YOUR LYING AND BRAGGING!
5
SAY, OLD MAN, OF COURSE YOU KNOW I WAS ONLY JOSHING! TO TELL THE TRUTH, SMITH STUCK ME TEN STRAIGHT GAMES!
THAT'S BETTER!

HE DOES SOME LONG-DISTANCE BRAGGING AND THEN BACKS DOWN

A PROTEST

To sin by silence, when we should protest,
Makes cowards out of men. The human race
Has climbed on protest. Had no voice been raised
Against injustice, ignorance and lust,
The Inquisition yet would serve the law,
And guillotines decide our least disputes.
The few who dare must speak and speak again
To right the wrongs of many. Speech, thank God,
No vested power in this day and land
Can gag or throttle. Press and voice may cry
Loud disapproval of existing ills;
May criticise oppression and condemn
The lawlessness of wealth—protecting laws
That let the children and childbearers toil
To purchase ease for idle millionaires.
Therefore I protest against the boast
Of independence in this mighty land.
Call no chain strong which holds one rusted link.
Call no land free that holds one fettered slave.
Until the manacled slim wrist of babes
Are loosed to toss in childish sport and glee,
Until the mother bears no burden, save
The precious one beneath the heart, until
God's soil is rescued from the clutch of greed,
And given back to labor, let no man
Call this the land of freedom.

On a Back-Yard Farm

By James J. Montague

The Poet and His Common or Garden Poetry

THE Poet, who lives in a palatial Italian villa four doors to the south, and who wears clothes that would be the envy of a bookmaker, says I do not appreciate the esthetic possibilities of my garden.

He says that if he had celery and salsify and carrots and stringbeans and parsley and rutabagas and radishes and gourds growing in his back yard he would turn them into copy and buy himself Amalgamated Copper with the proceeds.

"Tom Moore," he observed yesterday, "and Shakespeare and Joaquin Miller and Edwin Markham and Clinton Scollard are perpetually singing about flowers, which have no real value as food, and consequently do not appeal to the public when put into verse. Think what a hit you could make and how publishers would flock to exploit you, if you would write something like this, for example:

"Let others sing of tender leeks
Bedimmed with diamond dew,
Or of the radishes whose cheeks
Are of transcendent hue;
Of cantaloupes that dreamily
Lounge in their foliage lush,
Of turnips grave; but as for me,
Give me the squash, b'gosh!"

I pointed out to the Poet that lush was not a good rhyme for squash, but he said that was a matter that could be readily corrected by making the sixth line read:

Lie in their foliage. Bosh!

The fact that this did not make sense, he said, would give the poem what the editors call "appeal," and insure its sale.

"I have long thought," he continued, "what a mistake it was to waste endless words on the perfume of the rose or the violet, when the onion, which is of far more real use in the world—and influence, too, for that matter—lies utterly neglected.

"Besides, there are human qualities which vegetables possess that are utterly overlooked by the writers of all times. Listen to this:

TO A POTATO'S EYES.

"Opalescent little lamps,
Full of honest mirth,
Born to twinkle 'mid the damps
Underneath the earth;
When 'neath the cold world's heavy heel
Your dull life you pursue,
Does it delight you when you feel
A dozen eyes on you?"

"That," said I, "is no good. In the first place you start out with an ode to a potato's eyes, and you finish with an address to the potato itself. Besides that, it's the merest doggerel."

"That depends on the point of view," said the Poet. "No dubt when Kelly was writing poetry his work was called doggerel by the envious."

"Kelly?" I asked.

"I mean Shelley. You are altogether too insistent on details. How does this strike you:

"Asparagus! Asparagus!
Though life with us is strenuous,
You calmly germinate and sprout
Your yet unfolded fingers out,
Unmindful of the Cannon boom,
Unmindful of the Duma's doom,
And point up toward the sky to show
The way our every thought should go,
From sin and greed and malice free
Content with your philosophy.
Ah! what a pace you set for us,
Asparagus! Asparagus!"

"If you don't like that," he concluded, "you have no soul. You derive no benefit from being close to the earth. You are not much of a gardener, anyway."

There may be truth in what the Poet said. There certainly was precious little poetry in it.
